COSTLY GOULD ROAD IN RECEIVERS' HANDS

The Wabash-Pittsburg Terminals Most Expensive of Short Line Railroad Properties.

ITS LIABILITIES $57,252,100

Mortgage Bondholders Plan Opposition to Reorganization — Talk of Protective Committee.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, May 29.—At the instance of the Wabash Railroad and other creditors, Judge James S. Young, in the United States Circuit Court this afternoon, appointed Francis H. Skelding President of the First National Bank of Pittsburg, and Henry W. McMaster, General Superintendent of the Wabash-Pittsburg Terminal Railroad, receivers of the latter company.

A joint bond of $100,000 was filed. According to the bill filed, the liabilities amount to $57,252,100, while the assets are "unknown." The liabilities consist of promissory notes to the Wabash Railroad, the Mercantile Trust Company, and the Equitable Trust Company of New York, and of interest on bonds.

The Wabash-Pittsburg Terminal was organized on May 7, 1904, by the consolidation of the Pittsburg, Carnegie & Western, Cross Creek Railroad Company of West Virginia, and the Pittsburg, Toledo & Western Railroad of Ohio. The road proper is 59.9 miles in length and extends from Pittsburg to Jewitt Junction, Ohio, where it connects with the Wheeling & Lake Erie, another Wabash line.

Of the capital stock of the latter road, the defendant company owns 8,470 shares of the first preferred stock, 64,238 shares of the second preferred stock, and 118,700 shares of the common stock. The defendant company also owns the West Side Belt Railroad, and the capital stock of the Pittsburg Terminal Railroad & Coal Company.

The capital stock of the defendant company is $10,000,000, while that of the coal company is $14,000,000.

The Terminal Company, the bill avers, delivered its negotiable demand promissory note to the plaintiff, the Wabash Railroad Company, on Nov. 30, 1906, for $300,000 with interest at 7 per cent. Neither principal nor interest has been paid, the Terminal Company officials stating when demand for payment was made, it is alleged, that the company was unable to pay because of its financial condition.

The bill then recites other liabilities of the Wabash-Pittsburg Terminal Company as follows:

Mercantile Trust Company of New York, mortgage on company's rights and properties to secure 50,000 first mortgage bonds of par value of $1,000 each, given June 1, 1904, and payable in fifty years and bearing 4 per cent. interest, of which $30,200,000 is outstanding.

Equitable Trust Company of New York, second mortgage on same property given on same date to secure 20,000 bonds of $1,000 at 4 per cent. interest, all of which are outstanding.

Wabash Railroad Company, promissory note for $1,500,000 at 5 per cent. interest, dated May 30, 1905.

Pittsburg Terminal Railroad and Coal Company, demand promissory note for $3,500,000, dated May 1, 1905.

Same company, promissory note for $93,500, dated June 15, 1906.

Mercantile Trust Company, demand note for $412,000 at 7 per cent. interest, dated May 27, 1906.

Wabash Railroad Company note for $268,000 at 6 per cent., dated May 27, 1906.

Besides the above there is due or about to become due on purchase money mortgages $800,000, and upon audited accounts $278,600.

The defendant company had, according to the bill, to meet these obligations on May 22 only $21,000 cash.

For the length of the road, the Goulds paid more to construct the Pittsburg-Wabash Terminal than was ever paid to construct a road of similar length in this vicinity. The total cost was $21,000,000, the last three miles into Pittsburg costing $7,000,000. This included two tunnels, a $900,000 bridge across the Ohio, and a $1,000,000 station in this city.

When the company gained an entrance into Pittsburg, it obtained a contract with the Carnegie Steel Company whereby the latter agreed to ship over its lines one-fourth of all its traffic. A contract was also obtained with the Pittsburg Coal Company, which agreed to ship at least 4,000,000 tons of coal annually. But the Wabash-Pittsburg Terminal was never able to take advantage of this business because of a lack of cars.

Last year the company placed an order with the Pressed Steel Car Company for 4,000 cars, but was unable to take the cars off the company's hands. The enormous cost of the construction of the road and a shortage of ready money is responsible for the present financial troubles.

It developed yesterday that the Goulds are likely to encounter opposition in their plans for the reorganization of the Wabash-Pittsburg Terminal Company. Plans are being laid for the formation of an opposition committee of first mortgage bondholders. Those interested in the movement were reticent about the details of their plan. A committee is being formed to protect the interest of the holders of the Wabash-Pittsburg Terminal second mortgage bonds. Formal announcement of the organization of this committee is likely to be made on Monday.

The committee of first mortgage bondholders, headed by J. N. Wallace, President of the Central Trust Company, held its first meeting yesterday morning. In addition to the names already published the committee includes Paul Morton, President of the Equitable Life, and Harry Bronner of Hallgarten & Co. The committee has named Joline, Larkin & Rathbone as counsel.

The statement promised from the Gould headquarters in reference to the Pittsburg Terminal situation will not be issued until Monday.

Among the large holders of bonds of the Wabash-Pittsburg Terminal Company who are likely to join in a movement for the organization of an opposition committee are two London banking houses, through which a large amount of the bonds were placed in London. One large group of bondholders about whose attitude in the forthcoming reorganization considerable interest is expressed is composed of financial institutions and individual investors in Philadelphia, among whom a large number of the bonds were placed. These bonds are not represented by any of the members on the Wallace Committee.

The Gould securities were all firmer yesterday. Missouri Pacific showed a gain of 1⅜ points, and the Wabash stocks also showed net gains. The bonds of the Pittsburg Terminal Company were active, but of the two issues only the first showed a further loss. These declined to 44 and closed at 45, with a net loss of 1 point.

COLIN MAY RACE TO-DAY.

Tendons Not Bowed and He Has Swiftly Recovered from His Injuries.

The conviction expressed by all the connections of James R. Keene's racing stable on Thursday that the unbeaten colt Colin was hopelessly broken down was changed yesterday to belief that the colt would recover so completely that there is hope that he may be able to start for the Belmont Stakes this afternoon.

The singular change in this belief, as welcome as it is surprising to patrons of racing, is due to careful examination of the horse, which was under close observation all day yesterday by expert veterinarians. The result of these observations, completed in the evening with the aid of Trainer James Rowe, when the bandages which had been on the colt's legs all day were removed, convinced the veterinarians that Colin would stand for racing again. Last night H. De Courcey Forbes made a statement, authorized by Mr. Keene, as follows:

"The injury to Colin, which was at first thought to be the bowing of the tendons of both fore legs, turns out in the belief of James Rowe, his trainer, and Dr. McCully, the veterinary, to have been caused either by stepping on a stone or in a hole, resulting in a violent wrench. There is and has been no soreness in either leg, and the horse has never taken a lame step, the swelling having subsided as suddenly as it came. His tendons are perfectly straight.

"In view of the interest and the attachment of the public for Colin and the sympathy so feelingly expressed, Mr. Keene wishes to let every one know of the great improvement in the horse. And that not only does he hope now that Colin will race again, but that if he passes the final examination to be made by Dr. McCully and Mr. Rowe on Saturday morning, and it does not rain, he may run for the Belmont Stakes."

SIX-HOUR RUN UNDER SEA.

The Octopus Has a Successful Submerged Test Off Newport.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., May 29.—The submarine boat Octopus returned to-night, after a sea test of twenty-four hours under the Board of Inspection and Survey of the Navy, three of whom—Commander S. K. Reeves, Naval Constructor Robert Stocker, and Lieut. Commander George R. Evans—were on the submarine, while Capt. Thomas C. McLean and Commander A. F. Fechteler watched the vessel's workings on the surface from the tender Nina.

For six hours the submarine was speeded under the sea with her crew of fourteen men, making eight knots for two consecutive hours, and slowed down to five knots for four hours. The speed tests were satisfactory. None of the compressed air carried was introduced, and none was expelled while the boat was submerged. Food was cooked on the electric stoves while submerged.

As the fog was thick from early this morning until the Octopus returned to-night, the surface speed tests were interfered with. On Monday the Octopus will undergo a twenty-four-hour test at high speed.

HUMBLE HERO OF THE SEA.

Bargeman Declines to Desert His Craft Though Adrift Without a Tug.

Somewhere drifting out to sea on a small barge is a hero in a humble way, who, though alone, like the skipper of some great transatlantic liner, refused help, declaring that he was going to stick to his craft even though she was at the mercy of wind and wave. This man, whose name is unknown, was met with by the Old Dominion steamer Jefferson, in yesterday from Norfolk.

About 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon the Jefferson fell in with the scow barge Margaret adrift in the fog five miles west-southwest of the Delaware Lightship. Capt. Dole put his vessel about and came within speaking distance of the barge. She had but one man on board. To an offer to take him off he replied cheerfully that he was all right.

"Thanks," he cried in response to the invitation to come aboard. "I am O. K.. and I am going to take a chance that this craft will be picked up by some tug.

Replying to another question, he shouted back as the Margaret drifted off again in the fog, "I am fixed for a voyage, and I will take the chance."

CARRY POWDER FROM FIRE.

Crew of the Mayflower Remove Explosive from Burning Shore Magazine.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The fearlessness of the crew of the President's yacht Mayflower prevented what might have resulted in a disaster to-night, when fire was discovered in a powder magazine on the water front at the navy yard.

A party of the bluejackets under command of Lieut. Simms Reed entered the burning building and removed nearly two tons of powder, a number of high power signal rockets, and a quantity of explosives used in priming the caps of the big guns. The Mayflower was tied up to the wharf only a short distance away.

DIES TO SAVE LITTLE GIRLS.

Brooklyn Man Run Down by an Auto Never Recovered from Injuries.

William Jardine of 447 Sixty-third Street, Brooklyn, who was run down by an automobile Sunday afternoon while trying to save two little girls from the machine, died last night in the Norwegian Hospital. The automobile ran over his left leg, so badly tearing it that it had to be amputated. Blood poisoning set in. He never rallied after the shock of the operation.

Mr. Jardine, who was 42 years old, was crossing Fourth Avenue at Sixty-fifth Street last Sunday afternoon with his own daughter Marian and a niece named Alice Cooke, both girls being about 8 years old. An automobile driven by George Finn, who lives in Fifty-fourth Street, between Third and Fourth Avenues, Brooklyn, accompanied by two friends, came whizzing down Fourth Avenue. Mr. Jardine saw the machine just in time to throw the two little girls out of harm's way. The machine caught him.

Finn and his two companions deserted the automobile, but the police arrested him on a charge of assault on Wednesday. He was held in the Fifth Avenue Court to await the result of Mr. Jardine's injuries.

ROOSEVELT REWARDS LOYAL CONGRESSMEN

White House Statement Approving Representatives Who Have Supported His Policies.

NO BLANKET LETTER NOW

Only Those Who Have Not Opposed President Will Receive Expression of His Appreciation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 29. — President Roosevelt began to-day to issue certificates of good character and sound political health to the members of the House who have stood by him and his policies during this session. This is the first action under the policy of discrimination and selection which it has been announced Mr. Roosevelt will follow this year, instead of giving out such a blanket indorsement of all the Republicans as he gave two years ago in his letter to Representative Watson of Indiana, the Republican whip of the House.

That letter was used with telling effect during that campaign, and it has always been contended by the Roosevelt men that it was more largely responsible for the election of a Republican House than any other factor in the campaign. But when the House, under the leadership of Speaker Cannon and his machine, put in so much time at this session in blocking the legislation frequently and vehemently demanded by the President, word came from the White House that there would be no more blanket indorsements, and that the anti-Roosevelt men could shift for themselves this year.

That announcement had much effect in straightening around some of the men w[illegible] were in trouble in their districts, so [illegible] at the last considerable show of pass[illegible] Roosevelt legislation was made. Now the President has begun to hand out rewards, and to-day, when he bade good-bye to Hawley and Ellis, the two Oregon Representatives, a statement was given out at the White House formally approving their conduct during the session and specifically enumerating the items on which they had supported the "Roosevelt policies." The statement says:

> The President to-day said good-bye to the two Oregon Representatives, Messrs. Hawley and Ellis, and stated publicly that he took the occasion to thank them for the attitude they had consistently maintained in support of the Administration policies, and to wish them success in the election which is to take place on Monday next.
>
> The President stated that he wished publicly to express his appreciation of the cordial manner in which these gentlemen had backed up the policies and the measures which the President felt were of such consequence for the welfare of the country, in connection, for instance, with such matters as the upbuilding of the navy, the upbuilding of our merchant marine, the conservation of our natural resources, including both the preservation of the forests and the construction of waterways; securing proper employers' liability legislation, both as regards inter-State commerce and as regards the employes of the Government itself; securing child labor legislation, the effort to secure the proper administration by the courts of the power of injunction, and, finally, the securing by the Nation of thoroughgoing and adequate control over the great inter-State corporations, a control which shall be both effective to prevent any wrongdoing by them and at the same time of such a character as will permit the reward in ample fashion of all business which is so conducted as to be for, and not against, the public interest.

It is thought that other Congressmen who have supported Roosevelt will receive similar certificates.

GRAIN CORNERS END.

No Slaughter of Shorts—Task Now to Sell the Product.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 29.—James Patten's corner of May corn and J. Ogden Armour's corner on May wheat ended to-day. The two big corners did not end in a crash. There was no lurid exhibition of pyrotechnics, no frenzied slaughter of shorts. They simply oozed out.

Patten and Armour reaped large profits by the two deals. Patten is said to have cleared $2,000,000. When asked about it he only laughed and said he didn't know. Others said his winnings have been popularly exaggerated.

There was some little excitement in oats when the opening gong sounded. The shorts hammered the price. Oats opened at 56½, and in a few minutes the price was down to 51½. Then Patten stepped in and stopped the decline. The shorts, taking fright, rushed to cover, and the deal ended.

There was a similar struggle in the corn pit. At the opening the price sagged from 82½ to 77½. Patten permitted this apparently to "feel out" the corn which might be dumped into him later in the day. After satisfying himself that he could not be swamped in a last-hour deluge, he put the price back to 82½. At the final close it was 80½.

The next big task confronting Armour and Patten is to "bury the corpse," as merchandising the product of the corner is called on the Board of Trade. It is admitted that both men will have trouble. With May wheat closing at $1.11 and June wheat around 96, few can understand how Armour is going to get rid of his wheat. Millers won't buy it at over $1. Patten faces a similar task, but he is recognized as a genius when it comes to merchandising grain out of a ticklish situation.

AFTER THE WIRE COMPANIES.

Secretary Straus Planning Investigation of Telegraph and Phone Lines.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Secretary Strauss of the Department of Commerce and Labor had a conference to-day with Commissioner Smith of the Bureau of Corporations regarding the carrying into effect of a resolution adopted by the Senate yesterday directing the Secretary to "institute an investigation into all the telegraph and telephone companies engaged in the conduct of an inter-State business as to the methods used in handling the public's business, the wages paid telegraphers, telephone operators, and other employes of such companies," together with a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the companies.

The inquiry will probably be made in part by the Bureau of Corporations and in part by the Bureau of Labor. Secretary Strauss is inclined to believe that much of the information called for by the resolution may be obtained without great difficulty.

PLOT AGAINST THE KAISER.

German Anarchist, Who Awaited Him in Italy, Is Caught.

BARI, Italy, May 29.—Two weeks ago the police arrested here as a vagrant Paul Nikolaus, 25 years old, a mechanic of Charlottenburg, Prussia. The German Consular authorities were notified and requested the police to hold the man until it was possible for them to ascertain the reason for his presence in Italy.

Becoming tired of waiting longer in prison Nikolaus now has confessed that he is an Anarchist, and that he came from Berlin in April, pledged to kill a high personage of the Imperial Court who left Germany last month with Emperor William for Corfu. It is believed the Emperor himself was the intended victim.

From Berlin, Nikolaus says, he was accompanied by a companion who, however, left him at Ravenna. It was announced that Emperor William purposed to visit Apulia, an ancient division of southeastern Italy bordering on the Adriatic, and of which Bari is a province, and Nikolaus settled here in order to carry out his plan.

Weeks passed, and his money became exhausted. He was unable to read the Italian papers in which the movements of the Emperor were chronicled, but he learned one day that the Kaiser had abandoned his intention to come here. Being penniless, Nikolaus was unable to return to Germany, and fell into the hands of the police.

The man refused to give further particulars concerning his errand or a hint as to who instructed him to commit the crime or who was the personage to be killed.

WINS $10,000 WEATHER BET.

Jim O'Leary Wagered That Chicago Would Have 18 Rainy Days in May.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 29.—It is raining in Chicago to-night, and therefore Jim O'Leary, the gambler, wins his $10,000 bet that there would be eighteen rainy days in May.

He thought he had won his bet yesterday, but Weather Forecaster Cox declared it had rained only seventeen days on the Federal building. As far as Cox is concerned, officially, the Federal building is Chicago. O'Leary disputed the count, asserting that Chicago extends all the way from Bubbly Creek, across Goose Island to the end of the North Halsted Street car line, and that if it rained anywhere within these limits it rained in Chicago.

But to-night's rain ends the dispute, and O'Leary has won his bet.

A year ago last December O'Leary bet a similar amount that the mercury would not touch zero that Winter. He won the bet, and since then Chicago takes O'Leary's word on the weather. His latest victory has only fixed his status as a weather prophet more firmly.

There is an improbable story floating around Chicago to-night that O'Leary did not bet his own money, and that he was only the agent of a man high up in the Weather Department in Washington, who took this spectacular method of proving the efficacy of the new system of weather prediction.

TORNADOES IN OKLAHOMA.

Lives Are Reported Lost in Various Storms—Floods in Wisconsin.

GUTHRIE, Oklahoma, May 29.—A second series of heavy rains and windstorms struck Oklahoma last night. Tornadoes are reported at Hennessey, Enid, Frederick, Cashion, and Duncan; cloudbursts from Weleetka and Tulsa, and a waterspout at Navina. The damage by last night's storms is as great as the floods of last week. At Tulsa lightning struck twenty-seven oil tanks in the Glenn Pool, each holding 1,600 barrels. Loss, $25,000.

Five persons are reported killed at Duncan, and three seriously injured near Cashion. The Red River is several miles wide and the Cimarron is backing up. The Cottonwood River is expected to overflow by morning. The storm did much damage to cotton and corn. Cotton is a total loss in some sections.

On Red River a number of lives are believed to have been lost as a result of the sudden rise.

LACROSSE, Wis., May 29.—Washouts on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways tied up all traffic between Chicago and the Twin Cities on the main line of those roads to-day. Three unidentified men, who were stealing a ride, were crushed to death and several others were injured to-day when a Burlington freight train was ditched at Maiden Rock, Wis.

All along the Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa line the water is pouring down the bluffs in torrents.

CELEBRITIES IN DANGER.

Messrs. Erlanger and Thompson, Tooting for Rescue, Landed at Atlantic City

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 29.—Frederick Thompson and Abraham L. Erlanger of New York came near to being wrecked in Mr. Thompson's yacht off this city at dusk to-night. The Government life-saving crew went to their aid and piloted the yacht to a safe harbor.

The yacht left New York early to-day for Atlantic City. The trip was uneventful save for a rather rough sea and heavy fog. The yacht arrived off Absecon Inlet about 6 o'clock. Her pilot was unacquainted with the entrance to the inlet, and feared to start the yacht into the channel. He whistled for Pilot Yates, but Yates was out of town and could not respond.

The yacht drifted back and forth in the choppy sea in danger of sticking her nose into one of a multitude of sand banks at any moment. Her whistle was kept tooting and her bell clanging, but there seemed to be no relief.

The signals were finally changed to those of distress and the Government crew started to the rescue in their big lifeboat. They reached the yacht, and one of them stepped aboard and piloted her to safety. Mr. Thompson and Mr. Erlanger were brought ashore in the Government surfboat, and repairing to the home of Samuel Nixon, in Pacific Avenue, gave the proper thanks for deliverance from a watery grave. They will stay over Sunday and then, if the weather is propitious, will take a chance on the yacht again.

CEDRINO KILLED IN RACING AUTO TEST

Italian Champion's Car Turns Turtle at Pimlico and He Is Thrown Against a Fence.

IMPACT BREAKS HIS NECK

Was Trying to Drive His Car a Mile in 50 Seconds When a Wheel Collapsed—Second in Briarcliff Race.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., May 29.—Emanuel Cedrino, the fearless Italian champion automobilist, who came to this city yesterday to take part in the auto races to be held at Pimlico race track to-morrow, was killed in an accident to his car this afternoon. The smash occurred just as Cedrino was rounding the curve to the west of the grand stand and just in front of the Pimlico Hotel.

The spectators saw the car skid and turn over, three wheels were smashed, and Cedrino was thrown violently against the fence. His death, apparently, was instantaneous. There was every indication that his neck had been broken by the force of the impact.

Cedrino's brother, his mechanician, was in the car with him, but was little hurt.

Only a short while before the accident Cedrino had driven his car a mile in 51 seconds. He then ran it off the track, and after a short while took it back to give it another trial. He was coming along at lightning speed, his object being to break every record by driving the mile in 50 seconds. He rounded the first turn safely and straightened out nicely. As he reached the second and was coming about the right front wheel collapsed, the big machine shot into the air, and in a second was smashed to fragments.

Cedrino had intended making an effort to break all of his previous records. His car was entered in the 100-mile race along with ten other entries representing some of America's most successful cars. He also intended giving an exhibition run of twenty-five miles, in which he intended trying to smash the world's record for that distance. It was scheduled that he should drive a big sixty horse power Fiat.

Cedrino was for a number of years before he made his début in the United States chauffeur to Queen Helena of Italy. His first entry in this country in a competitive event was in the Eagle Rock hill climb, in 1904. On Aug. 22, 1905, he made a new world's track record of 53 minutes 14 2-5 seconds for fifty miles at Long Branch. He drove a car in the Vanderbilt Cup race in October the same year, but was forced to drop out after the second lap owing to his machine breaking down. He finished second in the Briarcliff trophy race last month.

Several times he had met with accidents, the most notable of which, prior to that of to-day, was in the big four-cornered road race in Cuba in 1906. Cedrino ran into a tree on the first lap at a double-S curve at Artemisa. The car turned turtle and Cedrino and his mechanician were thrown out. The calf of Cedrino's left leg was badly torn.

ESCAPE FROM ASYLUM IN AUTO

Two Women Who Call to See Jersey City Man Carry Him Off.

Special to The New York Times.

MORRIS PLAINS, N. J., May 29.—Charles Sulk, master plumber of Jersey City, who was committed recently to the State Asylum here, escaped from the institution to-night with the aid of two women in an automobile. A general alarm for the missing man and his accomplices has been sent all over the State.

The escape occurred early this evening when the women drove up to the asylum and asked for Sulk. The man, who is wealthy, is a pay patient, and was permitted to go to the door to receive his visitors. The two women did not get out of the automobile, whose engine was kept running, and as soon as Sulk reached the door he made a flying leap which landed him in the tonneau. The chauffeur put on full speed and hurried away.

Several keepers and assistant wardens tried to overtake the auto, but it was soon lost to sight. Then Dr. Britton B. Evans, the Superintendent, sent out the alarm, giving the number of the automobile, which had been observed by one of the wardens. The police refuse to disclose what this number was.

Sulk's commitment to the asylum followed upon the suit brought by his wife recently in Newark to prevent the man from deeding some property to a Newark woman in whom he had become interested. Sulk and his wife separated about three years ago, and he went to Newark, leaving her in Jersey City. Prior to the separation the man had been in financial difficulties, and had made over to his wife property worth about $30,000.

Recently Mrs. Sulk won the suit, and Sulk's commitment to the asylum followed.

AUTO VICTIM IN PRIVATE ROOM

Man Who Runs Boy Down Also Provides Two Nurses in Hospital.

Elliott H. Holbrook's automobile, in which Mr. Holbrook was going to his home, at 544 North Broadway, Yonkers, last night about 7 o'clock struck six-year-old Edmund Piplady in front of his home, at 259th Street and Riverdale Avenue. Mr. Holbrook lifted the lad into the car and ordered his chauffeur, William Wall, to drive at full speed to St. Joseph's Hospital, Yonkers.

There Mr. Holbrook provided a private room and two nurses for the boy. It was found that he had concussion of the brain, but it is expected that he will recover.

THOUGHT C. T. CLARKE A SPY.

French Police Arrest New York Aeronaut Who Landed Near Forts.

TOULON, May 29.—Charles T. Clarke of New York was arrested here to-day as a spy on the complaint of a peasant.

Mr. Clarke, accompanied by a French aeronaut, landed near the forts at the conclusion of his initial balloon trip in France, and while taking snapshots with his camera of the men packing the gas bag aroused the suspicion of an over-zealous Frenchman.

The Police Commissary after briefly examining Mr. Clarke released him, saying he was satisfied that the charge that he was a spy was absurd.

AMERICAN HURT IN PARIS.

Mrs. J. Farley Dickenson Thrown from an Automobile.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 29.—Mrs. J. Farley Dickenson of New York was the victim of an automobile accident to-day while returning from Versailles in a high-speed touring car belonging to a son of President Duke of the Tobacco Trust.

Mr. Duke, who was driving, was making good time along a deserted road at Ville d'Avray when the car skidded and upset. Mr. Duke was slightly injured, and Mrs. Dickenson was rather seriously bruised.

The party later returned to Paris in a taxicab. Mrs. Dickenson, who has resided in Paris for the past six months, is prominent in the social activities of the American colony.

WILL LET PRINCESS MARRY.

Eloped from Vienna with an Employe of an Automobile Firm.

VIENNA, May 29.—At a family council to-day it was decided no longer to oppose the marriage of Princess Amelie Louise of Furstenburg and Gustav Kozlan, an employe of an automobile firm, with whom the Princess recently eloped from Vienna.

The couple are now at Lucerne, and will live abroad after marriage.

WIRELESS TALK GOES FAR.

De Forest's Message to His Wife Is Heard 78 Miles Away.

MARSEILLES, May 29.—While Lee De Forest was talking to-day by means of his system of wireless telephony from the Exposition Building here with his wife, who was six miles off the coast on board the steamer Ile de France, the conversation was overheard at the radio-telegraph station at St. Marie de la Mar, seventy-eight miles away.

Subsequently conversation was established direct with St. Marie de la Mar. Mr. De Forest says this is the most satisfactory result he has attained.

NEW FIRE ENGINE WRECKED.

Driver, Strapped to His Seat, Rescued from Under Horses' Hoofs.

Engine 25, one of the new big machines of the Fire Department, swept around the corner of Second Avenue into Fourth Street last night on the way to a trifling blaze in a fruit stand in front of 61 East Fourth Street. The rear wheels skidded over the wet pavement and struck a hole in the asphalt where the cobblestones showed through.

The force of the shock snapped the king-pin in the engine and loosened the front wheels from the rest of the apparatus. Both parts turned over.

Driver John Ayres was strapped to his seat and was in danger of being kicked to death by the three horses, which were thrown off their feet. He was rescued by Lieut. Davis and Engineer Martin, neither of whom was hurt. The engine was badly wrecked.

WOMEN SANG FOR A TRAMP.

But They Didn't Know It Until He Left a Note of Thanks on the Stoop.

The women of the Chaminade Club, a leading musical society of Hackensack, N. J., gave their first parlor musical at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Hart on upper Mail Street yesterday afternoon. On leaving the house Mr. Hart found this note on the front stoop:

> About 4 P. M.; much obliged for your music. I enjoyed it very much. I am a tramp carpenter, and was sleeping off a jag underneath your pretty hedge. Your clapping audience didn't enjoy the concert as much as I did. Park Row for mine. Respectfully.

Mr. Hart told the club members about their appreciative listener, and they now wish him to know that they thank him for his complimentary note.

SELF-HYPNOTIZED ON STREET.

Student of Occult Sciences Falls Unconscious After Experiments.

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, May 29.—Sylvan A. Lee, a student of the occult sciences, fell unconscious this afternoon as the result of experiments made upon himself in his investigation of auto hypnosis. Mrs. Lee is prostrated at the condition of her husband.

She says he has recently devoted much of his time to the study of auto hypnosis, persisting in experimenting upon himself in spite of her protests. Some years ago she says he became blind for two weeks as the result of exposure, privation, and suffering endured in a long march through the heart of Tibet, being a member of the famous military expedition led by Col. Younghusband. He asserts that he is the only white man ever permitted to enter the forbidden City of Lhassa. Lee has in his possession newspaper accounts published in Calcutta, Bombay, and New York in substantiation of his assertions.

OLGA NETHERSOLE WINS SUIT.

Actress Gets $2,500 Verdict Against Cleveland Leader for Libel.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, May 29.—Olga Nethersole, the actress, got a verdict for $2,500 to-day against The Cleveland Leader in her $100,000 libel suit, which was the outgrowth of a dramatic criticism that appeared in The Leader over a year ago.

Miss Nethersole asserted that the article had not only damaged her business, but that it was an untruthful attack on her private character. Miss Nethersole came here personally to conduct the fight. Depositions from prominent theatrical men all over this country and in Europe were introduced.

The Judge in charging the jury told them that the statement in the criticism which said that Miss Nethersole had been driven into hysterics by a booing from a London audience was admittedly untrue, and that they should find a verdict not excessive for the plaintiff if they considered that she had been damaged by this statement. The jury followed the Judge's instructions.

The case will probably be appealed.

LA FOLLETTE BREAKS SENATE TALK RECORD

Wisconsin Senator Still Speaking After Fourteen Hours on One Subject.

OPPOSES CURRENCY BILL

Plan for Senator Davis to Relieve Him at Daylight—Senate Checks Demand for Roll Calls.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, May 30.—At 2:30 o'clock this morning Senator La Follette was continuing his speech in the filibuster to block the Currency bill. As he started at 12:30 on Friday afternoon, he has now held the floor fourteen hours, breaking the record made by Senator Allen in 1893. Allen spoke thirteen hours.

Senator La Follette, at this hour, is working hard, but is apparently strong enough to hold out for some time. It is planned to have Senator Stone of Missouri or Senator Davis of Arkansas, who is now on his way here, relieve the Wisconsin Senator at daylight.

In the Senate at 12:30 o'clock this morning Mr. La Follette again raised the point of no quorum. It disclosed the absence of a majority, and under the rules a call of the Senate was ordered which would bring in the absentees. Thereupon the Republicans moved to suspend the call, and on that motion the Democrats showed the first sign of assisting Mr. La Follette.

He demanded the yeas and nays, and that demand must be supported by one-fifth of those present. The Democrats raised their hands when the call was made, and thus helped La Follette to get the roll call.

Democrats Vote with Aldrich.

When it came to the vote, however, the Democrats did not support La Follette, and the motion carried 35 to 5. La Follette's colleague, Senator Stephenson, voted with the Aldrich men. This was the thirty-third roll call since the fight began. In moving that the call be suspended Aldrich cited a ruling by Vice President Hobart in 1897, on a point raised by Senator Hill of New York, that the point of no quorum could not be raised continuously as it has been done by La Follette, and that the quorum could not be again demanded after the point had once been settled until some business had intervened.

He contended that the mere delivery of a speech, or a part of a continuous speech, was not intervening business. This was the point settled by the roll call. That left La Follette without the only source of relief he had had since early in the afternoon, but he still went on.

The effect of the vote to suspend the call was at once apparent. The Republicans flocked around Stone and went to work on him with all their powers of persuasion. Aldrich and Long were especially active. At 1:10 Stone gathered up the pile of documents and papers which had been lying on his desk and left the chamber. He left word with La Follette that he would be prepared to speak on half an hour's notice, but that he was going to get some sleep. La Follette replied that he was good until morning, and would have plenty of time to give the notice Stone wanted. At that the Republicans began to leave the chamber, and by a quarter past 1 there was only a Corporal's guard on hand.

Vice President Fairbanks was still in the chair, and it was apparent that he was determined that there should be no "intervening business" to give La Follette the relief of another roll call. La Follette had not yet tried to raise the point, but when he did it was expected that Fairbanks would rule that he was not entitled to another roll call. At 1:30 only half a dozen Senators were in the chamber. La Follette was reading Poor's Manual and waiting for Jeff Davis.

It was reported at 12:50 A. M. that Senator Davis would be on hand at 4 o'clock.

For the first time in fifteen years the Senate is exhibiting a filibuster. Senators La Folette and Stone, one Republican and one Democrat, are engaged in a desperate attempt to hold up the Aldrich-Vreeland currency makeshift. Mr. La Follette took the first inning in the oratorical endurance contest and prolonged it until after midnight, more than twelve hours. Stone, who has a pile of books and manuscript on his desk and who looks good for another twelve hours, was slated to relieve him in the early morning.

Senator Stone arrived in the Chamber at midnight and stood ready to relieve Senator La Follette. If the Wisconsin man gives up the floor, however, the leaders will invoke a rule permitting any member to make only two speeches on one subject in a legislative day. They hold that he has already spoken twice, and so could not speak again while the Senate is held in session on this legislative day.

The development of the filibuster was an unpleasant surprise to Senator Aldrich, who thought yesterday that he had everything smoothed for his bill, and that it would go through some time this afternoon or evening. He had heard then from Mr. La Follette that the Wisconsin man did not intend to make an extended speech.

"All I want," Mr. La Follette is reported to have said, "is ten minutes in which to tell the Democrats what a lot of white-livered rabbits they are."

That was because all his efforts and pleadings to get one or two Democrats to join him in a filibuster had failed. If he could get two men to help, he announced at first, he would agree to hold up the bill until "we can hear from the country." When he found he could not get two assistants, he declared his readiness to go on if only one would stand by. Senator Aldrich, however, has a singular influence with Senator Culberson, the floor leader of the Senate Democrats, and La Follette could get no helpers.

Stone Comes to the Rescue.

Senator Stone got to town, hot foot from St. Louis, whence he had been summoned when the Democrats were breathing fire and slaughter and promising a die-in-the-last-ditch filibuster on Tuesday night. He found that the fight for which he had been called had been abandoned, and he had had his long hot trip for nothing.

That made him hotter than ever, and he declared an insurrection of his own on the spot. The fight had not been abandoned by him, he announced, and set out to find Mr. La Follette. They were in conclave until a late hour, and it was agreed that they should go it alone. Mr. Stone thereupon began preparation for a siege, and most of this afternoon, while Mr. La Follette was keeping the Aldrich men on the griddle, Mr. Stone was comfortably snoozing in anticipation of losing sleep during the night.

It was very evident from the manner in which the Aldrich crowd took the La Follette infliction that they were having hard work holding on to their tempers. Mr. Aldrich's face was a vivid reminder of the way Mr. Tillman looked that day a year ago when the Senate took his measure and made him apologize for the undue levity with which he had described his colleagues as actors in a minstrel show.

Mr. Hale was a study. At times he seemed inclined to take it as a joke, and then a wave of choleric impatience would sweep over him, and he would vent a little of his expert sarcasm on Mr. La Follette, only to have Mr. La Follette come back smiling and good natured, refusing to be tempted into a strength taking wrangle. It was understood during the afternoon that Senator Gore, the blind man from Oklahoma, had decided to help the filibuster along, and on one occasion he did manage to consume a few minutes.

Delay for Public Sentiment.

Senator La Follette told his friends that he is only trying to hold up the bill until public sentiment has an opportunity for expression, and if that did not come to his assistance soon he would not attempt to carry on his tactics of obstruction. The Aldrich crowd believe they can wear the filibuster out in a comparatively short time by means of a continuous session.

The precedent, however, is on the side of the filibusters in the continuous-session contest. That trick has not been tried since the great filibuster against the repeal of the Sherman silver purchase law fifteen years ago this Fall. There have been several alleged filibusters since then, but all occurred in a short session, where the filibusters only had to talk until noon March 4, when Congress expired by constitutional limitation. That limitation will not operate against this Congress until next March 4, and no filibuster could hope to go that long.

So it is the plan of Mr. Aldrich and his group to keep the Senate in continuous session now until Mr. La Follette is forced to give up. Orders have been given to all the Senate employes to divide into watches and take turns at their work so as to keep things running constantly. The elevators are to be running all the time, and the restaurant is not to close. These orders were officially promulgated this afternoon so that they could not fail to come to Mr. La Follette's ears.

Long Talk Fifteen Years Ago.

The continuous session in the filibuster of fifteen years ago came to an untimely end after 38 hours and 45 minutes, with the filibusters still strong and going easily, while the proponents of the bill were unable to maintain a quorum to listen to their speeches. Congress met in special session that year on Aug. 7, and the Sherman Silver Purchase Law Repeal bill was the first one introduced in the House. The whole fight of the session was on "House bill No. 1."

On Oct. 11, after the filibuster had been running for a long time, Senator Voorhees of Indiana, who was in charge of the bill, undertook to wear out its opponents by keeping the Senate constantly in session until a vote was had. There was a united opposition then, however, among about twenty-five of the silver men, including Democrats, Republicans, and Populists. About 6 o'clock of that evening, when some effort to adjourn was made, Voorhees made an open announcement of his intention. Then the filibusters got down to real work.

W. V. Allen, a Nebraska Populist, had started a speech in opposition earlier in the day, and it was announced that he was prepared to go all night. He resumed operations right after Voorhees's announcement was made, and stuck to his task until after 7 o'clock in the morning, "when," as The Congressional Record says, "after having spoken some fourteen hours," he yielded the floor. He had plenty of helpers, however, and they kept the talk going. There were calls for a quorum at frequent intervals, but as the session grew longer it became more and more difficult to get the requisite number of Senators in the Chamber.

At last, at a quarter of 2 on the morning of Oct. 13, the Sergeant at Arms reported he was unable to secure a quorum and the Senate had to adjourn. It met again at 11 that morning and remained in session for thirteen hours, but the next day the old custom of five-hour sessions was resumed, which continued until the end of that month, when the filibuster was worn out and the bill was passed.

First evidences of Mr. La Follette's determination were given early in to-day's session, when Senator Culberson, the Democratic leader, undertook to inject into The Record figures showing the huge appropriations made at this session. Despite his objections to interruptions Senator La Follette several times raised the point of no quorum, and he had to give way to rollcalls. He finally declined to yield the floor to the Wisconsin man and was upheld by the Chair, and by vote of the Senate. He then was able to finish his speech in peace.

La Follette Begins Long Speech.

Mr. La Follette began his address at 12:30. He announced almost immediately his intention to put forth every effort to defeat the measure. Then he plunged into an argument against the bill, the greater part of which was directed toward the clause that he declared would permit banks to offer as security for emergency currency the bonds or securities of railroad companies.

With great bitterness he denounced the action of Mr. Aldrich in eliminating the bond feature in the original bill on the eve of his prepared attack upon it some weeks ago. At that time, he said, he had predicted that the objectionable feature would be found incorporated again in the measure.

The Senator had not proceeded far until it was evident to all that the filibuster was a serious fact. Mr. La Follette did not let any chance escape to impress on his hearers that he was prepared to talk until his strength gave out. Then several Senators undertook to anger the speaker to the end that his energy might be undermined. On several occasions the ruse succeeded, Mr. La Follette rising to the occasion with all his old-time fire. When he discovered the object of his opponents he refused to be concerned by the evident attempts to bait him into excitement.

Foraker Makes an Attack.

The dramatic moment of the afternoon followed a declaration by Mr. La Follette that Mr. Aldrich refused to answer his questions frankly. The statement was made with such heat and in such manner that Mr. Foraker rose in protest and called for the reading of the Senate rule that a Senator may be deprived of the floor when making direct attack on a fellow-Senator or indirectly questioning his motives. When the rule was read it was found that Mr. La Follette was distinctly in violation of its spirit.

Thus an opportunity presented itself to break the filibuster. On the demand of Mr. Foraker a roll call was ordered to determine whether Mr. La Follette should be permitted to continue. There was a hurried consultation among the leaders, with the result that the only vote to remove Mr. La Follette was that cast by Mr. Foraker. The leaders explained that any other action would have made a martyr of the Senator, and would have served his purpose perfectly.

Clashes during the afternoon were frequent. Messrs. Hale and Kean were conducting a quiet conversation when Mr. La Follette insisted that only one Senator could hold the floor. Mr. Hale, purple with anger at the rebuke, turned on Mr. La Follette and said in all his experience he never had known a Senator to make such an objection when other Senators were conferring on Government business.

"I insist upon being heard," retorted Mr. La Follette. "If the Senators have Government business to talk about let them withdraw or talk it over somewhere else than in this chamber."

"If you will permit me to suggest it," said Mr. Hale, "the Senator from Wisconsin is receiving all the attention he deserves."

Raising the Quorum Question.

Only a few moments later Senator Kean sought to get his revenge during a pause in which Mr. La Follette was surveying the Senate.

"We cannot hear the Senator," said Mr. Kean, arising.

"Probably you can't," snapped Mr. La Follette. "Well, the reason you couldn't hear is that I was looking over this Chamber, and I find there is no quorum. I raise the point of no quorum. The Senator from New Jersey will hear me distinctly enough when a quorum is present."

When sufficient Senators had been corraled to make the necessary forty-seven Mr. La Follette picked up a bulky volume from his desk. It proved to be Poor's Manual of Railroads. He ran his thumb caressingly over the edge of the leaves and announced that he intended to read all of the contents of the book into The Record. He explained by saying that if the currency of the country was to be based on such securities as railroad bonds, a knowledge of railroads, their earnings, expenditures, and financial condition was essential. The book is a bulky volume, and it was estimated that Mr. La Follette had at least three days' ammunition on which to prolong his talk.

Up to 6 o'clock there were eighteen different roll calls, all suggested by Mr. La Follette on the ground that there was not a quorum present. The roll calls gave the speaker a chance to rest. On the seventeenth roll call there was racing and chasing on the part of the Sergeant at Arms and his assistants to find enough members to prevent adjournment for the day. At the last moment Senator Johnston of Alabama was rounded up and voted. He made the forty-seventh Senator.

Objects to La Follette's Clerk.

Mr. La Follette's manner of calling for a roll call irritated the leaders. In every case he paused, looked around the Chamber with a discriminating eye and said in his suavest tones:

"Mr. President, it is with the greatest reluctance that I am obliged to raise the question. I am forced, however, to the belief, much as I regret it, that a quorum is not present."

"The clerk will call the roll," said the President of the Senate each time, and the farce was repeated.

Mr. Gallinger was astonished and puzzled at the remarkable knowledge of the number of Senators present displayed by Mr. La Follette, and set an investigation afoot. He discovered that Mr. La Follette's committee clerk was in the background quietly counting noses, and whenever there was one less than the regulation number necessary he signaled the speaker.

The Clerk was not required to leave the Chamber, but was stopped from counting quorums. Mr. Fairbanks sustained a point by Mr. Gallinger that Clerks were entitled to the privilege of the floor only when about committee business. Mr. Gallinger attempted to have the Clerk's rights to the floor suspended on the ground that he was interfering with the business of the Senate. He got no support for his motion.

Plan to Stop the Speech.

Hour after the hour the speech went on. At 11:30 to-night Mr. La Follette was still going, but it was apparent he was under a great strain. His words did not come anywhere near as easily as they had in the afternoon, and he embraced every opportunity for even a slight delay. There had been twenty-nine rollcalls up to that time. These consumed about six minutes each, making a little less than three hours of this spasmodical rest.

Besides this he had had the time taken in the afternoon by Senator Owen to read a memorial for which he had yielded the floor to Senator Gore. This surrender to Mr. Gore was promptly seized upon by the Aldrich crowd, and Mr. Hale gave notice that thereafter the rule would be enforced which provides that a Senator yielding to another for anything but an interruption gives up his right to the floor and can resume only on being recognized again.

Mr. La Follette acquiesced in this cheerfully, not seeing where it would lead him. But it is by this point that the Aldrich men propose to shut him out in the end, if they can hold their quorum. Rule 19 provides that no Senator shall speak more than twice in the same day on any one question. Under a strict interpretation of the rule Mr. La Follette is now making his second speech to-day. The Aldrich men propose to keep up this legislative day, and when Mr. La Follette yields to Mr. Stone he will have exhausted his right under the rule.

It was reported to-night, however, that help from an unexpected quarter was on the way to him. He is said to have received a telegram from Arkansas from Jeff Davis saying:

"Hold the fort, for I am coming. Will be there in the morning." Mr. Davis has a bellows for lungs and the frame of a bull. He is as full of words as the traditional egg is of meat, and will be a great help to the filibusters if he comes.

Aldrich Will Not Surrender.

The Aldrich men held Mr. La Follette strictly to his work, and he got no relief except through the roll calls when he raised the point of no quorum. In the big filibuster in the Silver Purchase Repeal bill fifteen years ago, when Senator Allen spoke fourteen hours, including interruptions, he was relieved at intervals by the Clerk, who was permitted to read selections from documents and papers which Mr. Allen submitted.

There was none of that help for Mr. La Follette. Only once did Mr. La Follette succeed in getting a retort from Mr. Aldrich, although he made repeated efforts at it. This evening he declared with emphasis that he would never let up in his fight until Mr. Aldrich consented to eliminate railroad bonds from the bill. If that were done, he said, he would quit. Mr. Aldrich replied that it was not in his power to make such a change in the bill at this stage, but that even if it were he would not do so at the demand of Mr. La Follette.

At 11:30 the expectation was that Mr. Stone would relieve Mr. La Follette within an hour. Mr. La Follette had then been going for eleven hours. He had had no opportunity to get anything to eat except two or three sandwiches, which were brought to him, and which he took during roll calls.

Throughout his long speech Mr. La Follette drank numerous glasses of something that looked suspiciously like eggnog. They were brought to him from the Senate restaurant, and served to keep up his strength. In the members' gallery Mrs. La Follette and his daughter, Miss Lola La Follette, the actress, sat most of the time he was speaking.

Just before midnight Senator Stone appeared on the Senate floor, and immediately Mr. La Follette raised the point of no quorum for the thirty-first time. During the roll call he and Mr. Stone had a conference. The call disclosed that there was no quorum, and pending the effort to get one, Mr. Stone asked that the number of Senators present be considered a quorum, and that all others be excluded from the floor. This was overruled.

By this time forty-seven Senators had been found, just a quorum, and Mr. La Follette went on. During the thirtieth roll call he came out into the lobby for a moment and announced that there would be plenty of support for the filibuster. He declined to name any of the Senators who would help him.

OLDER'S LIFE IS THREATENED.

Editor Is Warned to Withdraw $1,000 Reward for Dynamiters.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 29.—The Evening Bulletin, which has been active in support of the prosecution of the graft cases, to-day published a fac simile of a letter received by Frémont Older, editor of The Bulletin.

The letter threatens the newspaper and its editor with destruction by dynamite unless the offer of $1,000 for information regarding the dynamiters of the house of J. L. Gallagher in Oakland is immediately withdrawn.

Union Men Sent to Jail.

CHICAGO, May 29.—Judge Carpenter to-day ordered three members of the local district of the Carpenters and Joiners of America sent to jail for thirty days for violation of an injunction issued by the Court. The men are John J. Brittain, who is also Treasurer of the Chicago Federation of Labor; Charles G. G. Grassel, and George H. Lakey. The men were found guilty of contempt in ignoring an injunction restraining them and other members of the organization from injuring the business of the Mears-Slayton Lumber Company of this city.

Bosschieter Slayer Seeks Pardon.

TRENTON, N. J., May 29.—George J. Kerr, one of the four men serving sentences in State prison for the murder of Jennie Bosschieter in Paterson in 1901, has filed a petition with the Court of Pardons asking for a parole. Similar efforts have been made in his behalf before. He was sentenced to fifteen years. The others were sentenced to twenty years each.

JURY OUT ALL NIGHT IN WHITMORE TRIAL

Sent Word They Couldn't Agree, but Judge Refused to Discharge Them.

SPLIT ON DEGREE OF GUILT

Majority Believed to be for Murder in Second Degree—One Hanging Out for First Degree Verdict.

The jury in the trial of Theodore S. Whitmore in Jersey City for the alleged murder of his wife in Lampblack Swamp, Harrison, N. J., on last Christmas Day, sent in word to Justice Swayze at 9:35 o'clock last night that it could not agree on a verdict. Justice Swayze answered that he could not accept such a finding, and at 9:55 o'clock the jury, which had been out since 2:40 in the afternoon, was locked up for the night.

If the jury arrived at a verdict during the night it will be reported to the court at 9 o'clock this morning, when Justice Swayze opens court.

Earlier developments indicated that some of the jury at least had been considering verdicts of murder in both the first and second degrees.

The locking up of the jury came after an unusual series of events in the courtroom. Before the Justice delivered his charge the prisoner and his counsel were confident of a verdict of acquital. The Justice's charge, however, was regarded as being strongly against the prisoner, and Whitmore began to lose some of his nerve.

Makes a Smiling Protest.

After the jury had been out more than five hours, however, the defendant began to recover his courage. When at 7:55 o'clock the jury asked for instructions on a particular point and Justice Swayze had them brought into court the prisoner protested, because his counsel, Alexander Simpson, who had left the Court House, was not present, and said that he preferred to have Mr. Simpson present rather than trust to his assistant. Justice Swayze assured him that he would see that his rights did not suffer. The prisoner had made his objection to the Justice in a composed manner, even smiling as he addressed the court.

When the jury had filed in Justice Swayze read the letter they had sent to him.

"I understand, gentlemen," said he, "that you wish to know whether you can bring in a verdict of murder in this case in other than the first degree."

The prisoner gave a startled look at the jury, turned white, and his head fell forward on the table.

"You may," continued the Justice, "bring in a verdict of murder in the second degree if you think that the defendant killed his wife without premeditation or while not intending to do her serious injury."

Foreman Jewkes and ten of the jurors turned to Juror James Brown.

"Are you satisfied now?" the foreman asked. Brown indicated that he was, and the jury went back to its room.

Whitmore Loses His Nerve.

The prisoner's demeanor thereafter became pitiful. He seemed hardly able to sit in his chair. All of his bravado exhibited in the earlier stages of the trial disappeared.

Deputy Sheriff Averson had to partially support the prisoner with his arm at one time, and his brother, Elias Whitmore, went to him.

"For God's sake take me back to the jail; it's all up," said the prisoner.

Before his request could be complied with Justice Swayze sent for the jury. When they were again in the room he said:

"Gentlemen, I hope I was not misunderstood in what I said when I told you that you could bring in a verdict of murder in either the first or the second degrees. You may do that, but you may also acquit the prisoner. I do not wish to be misunderstood. The question of the defendant's guilt or innocence rests with you."

The jury then went out again and Whitmore, at his own urgent request, was taken to his cell in the jail next door to the old Court House. There he lay down on his cot, refusing to see even his brother.

The request of the jury for instructions and the appeal of the other jurors to Juror Brown was taken to indicate that Brown had stood out for a verdict of murder in the first degree, that he had argued that it was either that or acquital, and that the others had tried to compromise on a verdict of murder in the second degree.

Justice Swayze's charge to the jury earlier in the afternoon came as a blow to Whitmore, and apparently as a surprise to his lawyer, whose summing up had put the prisoner in high spirits.

Judge's Charge to the Jury.

"There is one circumstance that must have struck your mind as it did mine," said the Justice in his charge to the jury. "That was the finding of the body of Lena Whitmore in a nude condition.

"Is that consistent with an accident or suicide theory? What motive led the murderer to thus profane the body of this woman? The first motive would be to make identification difficult or impossible, and another to take revenge upon the body for fancied wrongs done to the living. Who was most interested in making identification impossible, or who would be most inspired to seek vengeance upon the body of this woman? No one except a person so connected that he might be suspected of the crime. You must consider whether these or other motives point to or away from this defendant.

"In all cases of circumstantial evidence it is important for the State to prove that the defendant had a motive for the crime; that preparation was made by the defendant, and that the defendant made an effort at concealment. All these things the State has sought to prove. The defendant's disagreement with his wife, his quarrel with her the night before Christmas, the evidence that he was enamoured of another woman; that he told his wife's paramour to take her; that he wanted her no longer—motives such as these are powerful in their effect upon men's conduct.

Wife's Bank Book and Jewelry.

"Then there is the bank account and the jewelry of value. What led him to lie when he attempted to get the book? What led him to retain his wife's dresses and jewelry when he sent the valueless property of his wife to Mrs. Schmitter? Why did he retain them?"

Justice Swayze recalled the circumstance that Whitmore had arranged to have his place on the shuttle train taken care of on Christmas night.

"Did he give the true reason for his absence?" asked the Justice. "If the reason given was true then the State failed in an important particular. But if the reason given was false then it is a circumstance against him."

Referring to the Lena letters, the Justice declared that Whitmore ran a grave risk in writing them if he did not know where his wife was, since they might have fallen into her hands. He finished the night of Dec. 26 at his own house in bad company.

The Justice called attention to the fact that the State had urged that he would not have dared to do so if his wife had been likely to return.

Relations with Dickinson Woman.

"He offered to give Georgia Dickinson," continued the Justice, "some of his wife's cothing, and on Dec. 31 he offered to sell Siegel some of his wife's jewelry."

The identification of Quinn was important, but not necessary, the Justice said. He then took up the testimony of Mrs. O'Neill, who testified to having seen Whitmore at his house on Christmas night at 9:45 o'clock. He read from her testimony at the Coroner's inquest. Her evidence had been full of "I don't remembers," the Justice said. Excluding that evidence, it had been shown by other witnesses that Whitmore was at his house last at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of Christmas.

"Granting Mrs. O'Neill's statement that she saw him at 9:45 o'clock, and Pulvers's, that he was at the City Hall station at 11:30 o'clock, and the alibi was perfect. But, disregarding Mrs. O'Neill's statement, and there is an interval of from 4 o'clock in the afternoon to 11:30 o'clock at night, which was time enough for him to have gone to the swamp and back.

"Pulvers admitted that he was not sure whether it was Winchell or Smith who appeared in the room when he was talking with Whitmore. If it was Smith Whitmore is not placed upon the elevated station until a little before 10 o'clock at night. It is for you to decide whether that was time enough for the commission of the crime."

"If you find that the defendant took his wife to the Harrison swamp with intent to kill you must find him guilty of murder in the first degree. If you find that he took her there and killed her while attempting to injure her you must bring in a verdict of murder in the second degree."

Just prior to the charge Mr. Vickers made a two hours' summing up for the State.

HALE GUILTY OF MURDER.

Youth Who Killed Girl in Cemetery Sentenced for Life.

BRISTOL, Tenn., May 29.—After deliberating eighteen hours, the jury in the case of Ack Hale, the youth charged with the murder of a girl, to-day returned a verdict of murder in the first degree, recommending mercy. The court sentenced Hale to life imprisonment.

The tragedy occurred in East Hill Cemetery, in this city, on the night of May 27, 1907. She was found dying, and he said that she had committed suicide with his pistol. The girl was to have been married three days later to J. E. McRoberts, a young man of Georgel, Va., and had already prepared her wedding clothes.

The theory of the State was that Hale attacked her and then murdered her to conceal his crime.

CONFESSES HOLMES MURDER.

But Chicago Police Say Young Jacobson Is Lying.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 29.—David Jacobson, a 19-year-old boy under sentence to the State Reformatory for vagrancy, told the police to-day that he with three companions robbed and murdered R. C. H. Holmes, purchasing agent for the Commonwealth Edison Electric Company, whose body was found in the alley in the rear of Lyon & Healey's music house a week ago Thursday night. The police declare he is lying.

Jacobson implicated three other youths in the crime, Charles Lewis, Samuel McEwen, and George Miller. All three of the young men deny any part in the killing of Holmes, although they admit they know Jacobson.

Assistant Chief of Police Schuetler after hearing the "confession" pronounced it a fake.

SHOT AT DAUGHTER'S SUITOR.

Barber Fired Three Times After Getting a Note from Former Employe.

James Pietro, who has a barber's shop at Third Avenue and Forty-fifth Street, stood in the doorway of his shop at 8:30 o'clock last night, and with a crumpled note in one hand and a pistol in the other, blazed away three times at Joseph Gelant, formerly his employe, who is desperately in love with Pietro's sixteen-year-old daughter.

The girl is said to be the innocent cause of Gelant's discharge from her father's employment two months ago, and now of the landing of her father and her sweetheart in safely separated cells in the East Fifty-first Street Police Station. Gelant ran counter to the father's anger, and since he was discharged, according to Pietro, has written several letters to Pietro, threatening his life unless he took him back and gave him his daughter in marriage.

Policeman Clark of the East Fifty-first Street Station was near the shop when he saw Pietro run to the door and fire two shots at Gelant. Before he could grab Pietro a third shot was fired, all at close range, but all with equally bad aim. Pietro was hustled by Clark back into his shop shouting "Let me at him," while some one else caught Gelant. Hundreds of people collected in a few minutes and the reserves came on the run.

Both men were taken to the station house and locked up, Pietro on the charge of attempted felonious assault and Gelant charged with sending threatening letters. Gelant denies sending the letters, and Lieut. Daly had them read at the station house without finding anything very menacing about them.

Pietro told the police he had just got a note from Gelant summoning him to his door, and, fearing that the young man was going to shoot him, he shot first.

A razor was found on the sidewalk near where Gelant had been standing, but the police say they have no evidence that it belonged to him.

Sure Miss Vanderbilt Wasn't Killed.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., May 29.—Prosecutor Berdine denied to-day that he had started any new investigation into the death of Miss Bertha Vanderbilt, whose body was found in the Raritan Canal, and who had been Assistant Librarian of Princeton University. County Detective Hoffman and County Physician Suydam are satisfied that the girl was not murdered.

While in Pittsburg shortly before the crime Baker was introduced to a young woman, to whom he became very attentive. Through postal cards he mailed to her from various places Post Office detectives traced him and arrested him in New York.

GUNNESS GOODS AT AUCTION.

LAPORTE, Ind., May 29.—The auction sale of the personal property left by Mrs. Bella Gunness to-day was attended by between four and five thousand persons. Many of the articles brought five and ten times their cost price. At one time during the day more than 500 horses were tied about the farm.

The greatest interest centred in the sale of the horse driven by Mrs. Gunness, the pony and cart driven by the Gunness children, and a shepherd dog. All of these brought fancy prices, the dog alone selling for $107.

WARRANT ISSUED FOR F. G. BAILEY

Creditors Take Steps to Capture Man Who Sailed Away with Their Goods.

HE PLANNED FLOATING FAIR

Fugitive on the Goldsboro Once Tried to Get the Baltic for a Touring Exhibit of American Goods.

F. G. Bailey, President of the defunct Export Shipping Company, who is now supposed to be afloat on the steamer Goldsboro, sailing without a flag and having on board about $100,000 worth of merchandise belonging to other persons, is now in reality a fugitive from justice. A warrant was issued charging him with the larceny of $1,965 by Magistrate Walsh yesterday. The complainant was Robert J. Bole, the local manager of the Keystone Drilling Company of Bear Falls, N. Y.

The first news of the Goldsboro since she sailed away from here after being searched for arms by revenue officers came yesterday, when the British Consul General here received a cable message from the British Minister at Guatemala City, which said that the Goldsboro sailed from Puerto Cortez, Honduras, on May 23 for Ceiba, Honduras. It is not known when the vessel arrived at Puerto Cortez, or how long she stayed in port. It is a port that is a favorite with persons who desire to avoid extradition, and ships' papers are not too carefully scrutinized.

The international chase for the Goldsboro and Bailey is now becoming keen. The British authorities seek to stop the voyage of the ship because they have revoked her clearance papers, and the vessel is in consequence not under any flag. As soon as word was received here that the Goldsboro had been reported from a foreign port, a meeting of the Manufacturers' Association was held at 170 Broadway. A. Parker Nevin, R. J. Bole of the Keystone Company, and I. H. Ford of the Star Drilling Company were appointed a committee to prosecute the search for Bailey. The creditors have agreed to contribute a pro rata share of a fund to be used in bringing Bailey to this country and to trial.

The Manufacturers' Association yesterday communicated with the State Department with a view to the detention of the Goldsboro by the American Consul at any port at which the steamer may stop. A reply came asking for more information. It was pointed out that if the vessel is under British registry the United States cannot seize her, but can only act in cooperation with the British Government.

The Goldsboro cleared from this port for Belize, Central America. She was bought by Bailey through Hagen & Co. of Philadelphia. Capt. Oxley, her commander, it is said, has had an adventurous life. At one time his name was connected with a revolutionary expedition to Haiti. Last week British Consul Bennett received information that Capt. Oxley had taken an oath that he was a British subject. This was found to be incorrect, it is said, and this was the excuse for revoking the ship's papers. F. G. Bailey is well known to reporters here. He attracted great attention some three years ago when he came forward with a scheme to equip and send out a floating American Exposition. A great steamer, the White Star liner Baltic, he selected, was to be chartered, and American manufacturers were to be invited to put their best on board of her, and she was to be sent around the world as a witness in strange places to American industry. The scheme fell through.

It is probable that as soon as the Goldsboro is reported in some port both the British Government and the State Department will take quick action to end the sea career of both the vessel and those on board.

20 THROWN FROM TRAIN.

Observation Car on Royal Blue Limited Whipped Off on Curve.

CONNELLSVILLE, Penn., May 29.—Twenty passengers were seriously injured, three of them probably fatally, shortly before noon to-day, when the observation parlor car on the Royal Blue Limited train on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, bound from Chicago to New York, left the rails two miles from Garrett, Penn., east of here, and plunged down an embankment.

The injured were placed aboard a special train and hurried to Cumberland, Md., where hospital accommodations had been prepared by the railroad.

One of the injured is Frank Sweeney of Port Jervis, N. Y. He was seriously hurt about the head, but his wounds were not regarded as necessarily fatal.

The following are believed to be seriously injured: S. M. Johnson, Connellsville, Penn.; L. R. Sanford, La Grange, Ill., and Mrs. A. V. Owen, Baltimore. The last named was bruised about the shoulders and arms. Mr. Sanford was said to be the worst off of any of the injured, but the extent of his hurts or those of Mr. Johnson could not be learned.

The train, which is one of the most important on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, left Pittsburg this morning at 8 o'clock. Owing to the warm weather the observation parlor car was full of passengers.

When the train reached a point two miles east of Garrett, and while rounding a sharp curve, the observation car swung from the tracks.

The passengers were scattered pell mell. A number who were seated on the platform on a wide-spreading awning were pitched far into the air, alighting clear of the wrecked car, but among stones and cinders, causing painful injuries to all. Others were thrown in a heap to the floor and showered with broken glass.

The exact cause of the accident has not been determined.

POLICEMAN CATCHES '2 MEN.

Handcuffs Burglars Singlehanded After They Leaped from Window—Confess.

Solomon Levine, janitor of the apartment house at 11 West 113th Street, saw two men enter the flat of Mrs. Gussie Elstein, on the fifth floor, yesterday afternoon, just after Mrs. Elstein had gone out, and he telephoned to Police Headquarters. Policeman Allgier came from the East 104th Street Station and broke in the door, finding it chained on the inside.

He got to Mrs. Elstein's bedroom in time to see two men jump across a six-foot airshaft to the roof of a lower building. Allgier ran to the street to intercept the men. When they didn't appear, he started for the roof through the house at No. 73.

It happened that the men were coming down through this house, and the policeman met them on the third floor. He threw them both down and handcuffed them. At the police station they said they were George Kresh, 17 years old, of 180 East 104th Street, and Frederick Ray, the same age, without a home. On the men the policeman said he found a bunch of keys, three Canadian ten-dollar bills, and about $150 worth of jewelry.

Detectives Higgins and Gleason questioned the youths, and said that they admitted having robbed the flat of Mrs. Allen Jacobson of 149 East 118th Street on Thursday and sold $55 worth of clothing to S. Markowsky, a dealer at 2,007 Second Avenue. The detectives took Mrs. Jacobson there, and after she had identified some clothing as belonging to her, they arrested Markowsky for receiving stolen property.

Magistrate Butts, in the Harlem Court, held each of the prisoners in $1,000 bail for further examination.

EATON, CRANE & PIKE COMPANY

PROBATE REFUSED TO LAMPORT WILL

Mary C. Smedley, Chief Beneficiary, Used Undue Influence, Surrogate Beckett Rules.

SAYS SHE WITHHELD FACTS

And Employed Dr. Hatch of Universal Medical Institute Fame to Attend Aged New Yorker.

In refusing to admit to probate yesterday the will of Hiram H. Lamport, who died in Paris in January, 1907, leaving an estate valued at over $100,000 to Mary Clementine Smedley, who acted as his companion, Surrogate Beckett, in one of the longest decisions ever handed down from the Surrogate's office, finds that Miss Smedley exercised undue influence over Lamport, who was 86 years old at his death. The decision contains an exhaustive review of the evidence, and the Surrogate uses unmistakable language in dealing with certain parts of it.

Under the will Miss Smedley inherited $15,000 cash, and was also made residuary legatee. The only other bequest was one of $2,000 to James L. Parson, assistant cashier of the Chemical National Bank, conditional upon his qualifying with Miss Smedley as an executor. It was contested by a number of the testator's relatives, undue influence by Miss Smedley being alleged.

Surrogate Beckett says:

> Having considered all the testimony, I am convinced that the preponderance of the evidence permits but one conclusion here, namely: That the propounded paper was obtained by influence which was exercised by Mary Clementine Smedley, and that that influence was undue. I will refuse the paper and reject it. I will also refuse costs to the proponent and to those parties appearing in favor of the probate. I will grant costs to the contestants, to be charged against Miss Smedley personally.

Miss Smedley became acquainted with Mr. Lamport some years prior to 1901. In that year she renewed the acquaintance while he was boarding with a Mrs. Dunlevy, in Brooklyn. Shortly after this he had a hemorrhage of the brain, and Surrogate Beckett says: "From that time on until his death he was in an enfeebled condition." Continuing Mr. Beckett says:

> Mr. Lamport was undoubtedly very near, if not in, his dotage. He was not able to write more than his own signature, and that poorly, and only with the aid of a magnifying glass. His condition, as portrayed by proponent's witness, Dr. Hatch, is that when decedent was 84 years old he was employed to "prolong his life," gave him electricity, advised that he go abroad, and administered a "life-giving serum" by hypodermic injections.

After describing how Miss Smedley made her way into the life of Mr. Lamport Surrogate Beckett says:

> In the year 1905 she began in a more positive way to close in upon his personal property. Then in the Summer of 1905, in the span of thirty-five days, three lawyers were summoned to decedent's presence to draw a will for him. For some reason the first two did not accomplish the purpose, or failed to act, and at this very time a very substantial portion of decedent's estate was given, transferred, or assigned to Miss Smedley.

The Surrogate then touches on the calling in of a lawyer, Hubert E. Rogers, to make Mr. Lamport's will, but who refused to do so, and then says:

> Dr. J. Leffingwell Hatch now more prominently appears. At this time he testified he resided at 60 West Tenth Street. He has been financially embarassed for some years, and is not yet discharged in bankruptcy. He was at one time connected with the Universal Medical Institute in West Twenty-ninth Street, an advertising business, which came under the condemnation of the United States postal authorities. He has published to the world that he invented or discovered a life-giving serum, but up to the present he neglects to disclose its constituent parts to his profession.

Surrogate Beckett, after dealing in detail with the events prior to and the actual signing of the will by the decedent, comes to the conclusion that the evidence discloses a decided influencing of Lamport's mind in her favor, and on these grounds refuses to admit the will to probate.

SNELL WILL SET ASIDE.

Jury Finds That He Was Insane Over Women.

CLINTON, Ill., May 29.—The jury in the second trial of the Snell will case, after having been out six hours, brought in a verdict early to-day setting aside the will of Col. Thomas Snell.

The jury declared that Col. Snell was of unsound mind. The will was contested by Richard Snell, a son, who was cut off with an annuity of $50. It was proved to the jury that Col. Snell was insane over women, to several of whom he gave large amounts of money and from whom he received letters which constituted much of the testimony for the plaintiff.

Col. Snell died in June, 1907, leaving an estate of $2,000,000. To his son Richard he left an annuity of $50, while to a Mabelle Snell McNamara, whom he termed a grandniece, he left $25,000 and an annuity of $1,000.

It developed at the trial that Col. Snell previous to his death bought two houses for Miss McNamara, and frequently gave her checks for large sums. This was the second trial, the first jury not being able to reach an agreement.

SOCIALIST PASTORS SEE REVOLT COMING

One Tells the Others if They're Not Prepared for Wounds to Go Home.

HINT SOME ARE MARTYRS

Jersey Preacher Says That to One Who Was to Have Spoken Came the Command Silence, and He's Away.

Talk of revolution and blood, sacrifice and martyrdom, characterized the first public meeting of the three-day session of the National Christian Socialist Conference, held yesterday afternoon in the parish house of the Church of the Ascension, Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street. The speakers were educated preachers. One speaker, a Doctor of Philosophy, told his hearers that if they were not ready to experience wounds and death to go home. It was also hinted that one preacher, name not revealed, who was to have spoken, had been compelled under pressure to stay away.

The pastor who talked most of blood was the Rev. Eliot White, for five years Secretary of the Diocese of Western Massachusetts, who comes from Worcester, where he has found a great deal of opposition to Socialist theories.

"We are going to have a revolution," he went on. "People who do not recognize the strength of this movement will do so as it sweeps from east to west. Unless I am greatly mistaken there will be a far keener alignment then—well, I expect to see trouble. There are going to be times when no flowers will be scattered in our paths, when there will be no peace ahead.

Says the Revolution Is Here.

"The revolution is coming, is here, and there may be spots of blood. If you are not ready to experience blood, wounds, death, go home. For some there will be a Mount of Calvary, but it will come when the bitter Garden of Gethsemane is past.

"You know revolutions have never been particular. Who was the first man to go down in the French Revolution? Foulon, the banker, who said that if the people could not pay taxes they might eat grass.

"Let nobody think this is a fight between the rich and the poor. It is not. It is between those who don't deserve and yet get, and those who do deserve and don't get.

"We cannot keep still, and we won't keep still. The people who see what should be done and don't do it—they are the ones who contribute to a revolution by bloody means."

Socialists Being Muzzled.

The Rev. A. W. Wilson, pastor of the Congregational Church in Ridgefield, N. J., said that preachers who were espousing Socialism were being attacked, and in some cases being forced to give up their pulpits. There was a name on the afternoon's programme of a speaker that would not be responded to. Why? Because the command had gone out to him, as to many others—silence.

The next speaker, according to the programme, was to be the Rev. Dr. E. A. Wasson, rector of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Newark, N. J. It was announced that he had been "unavoidably detained." Reporters asked if pressure had prevented him from coming; no one would answer the question.

In concluding his talk the Rev. Mr. Wilson said: "Silence or resign has been the command everywhere. Men have resigned, are resigning, and will continue to resign.

"We have perhaps twenty pulpits in New York City into which we can put speakers—twenty out of a thousand. The preachers are getting restless. I am sure there is going to be a revolution. You can't transform the Church to new views. It means an entire breaking up and the forming of a union church of all bodies. The people will not stand an ecclesiastical monarchy."

Henry Frank as a Martyr.

The Rev. Henry Frank pointed to himself as a martyr. He had left the established Church to preach free theological doctrines, backed by some of the richest men in New York, he said, but they deserted him when he began to preach Socialistic doctrines.

Platon Brounoff pointed to himself also as a Socialist martyr. He said he had been ousted from the Board of Education because he was a Socialist.

The Rev. Dr. Charles P. Fagnani, a professor in Union Theological Seminary, presided at yesterday's meeting. He said that many Socialists believed that if Christ came to New York he would go to work among the east side agitators.

J. Eads How, the "millionaire tramp" of St. Louis, was among the talkers. He told the preachers to appeal first to the proletariat, and then come "to us," not explaining whom he meant by us. He had been talking about "the intellectuals." "Us" may have referred to them.

It was announced that the membership of the Christian Socialist Fellowship had increased from 32 to 270 in a very short time, scattered throughout the country. The Rev. H. W. Pinkham of Denver, Col., asked why there wasn't a "Jewish Socialist Fellowship."

The Pastors Have These Objects:

The objects of the Christian Socialist Fellowship were thus set forth yesterday:

"To permeate churches, denominations, and other religious institutions with the social message of Jesus; to show that Socialism is the necessary economic expression of the Christian life; to end the class struggle; to re-establish industrial democracy, and to hasten the reign of justice and brotherhood upon earth."

The conference meets in the Parkside Presbyterian Church, Flatbush, Brooklyn, this afternoon and to-night. It will close with a mass meeting in Carnegie Hall to-morrow afternoon.

Last night's session was presided over by Miss Mary Sanford. John Spargo condemned President Roosevelt for his denunciation of "class consciousness," which the speaker said was the keynote of the Socialistic movement.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise defended the Nation's Chief Executive, asserting that the Socialists had not understood the President, and that the latter was committed to a policy of social equity and righteousness. He also thought the Christian Socialists had been unwise in their choice of a name, as the same designation had been taken by a party in Austria and all German-speaking countries which was pledged to anti-Semitism, a thing both unchristian and unsocial.

SHOT IN TONGUE, NOT CANCER

Swelling Appeared Soon After Di Blasio Had Been Shot.

Two days after he had been shot in the mouth and breast by Carlos Di Rienzo of 233 East 111th Street, who pleaded guilty to the assault on Wednesday before Judge Crain, in General Sessions, Antonio Di Blasio of 311 East 111th Street developed a swelling of the tongue, which the physicians believed to be a cancer until yesterday, when an operation disclosed that the swelling was a flattened 45-calibre bullet embedded in his tongue. It was removed, and Di Blasio went back to the House of Detention happy.

The shooting took place on April 17 in East 111th Street. The two men, who are cousins, had been going together from saloon to saloon, and late in the evening quarreled. Both began to shoot. Di Blasio's shots flew wide. One of Rienzo's enter Blasio's left cheek, knocking out a tooth; the other, which hit him in the lower part of the breast, brought him down.

Di Blasio was taken to the Harlem Hospital, and when his clothes were being taken off a bullet fell to the floor. It had passed through his body, doing little injury. A few days later he was taken to the House of Detention. There his tongue began to pain him severely; he could not eat, and talked with difficulty. A physician who was called in examined the swelling and pronounced it incipient cancer. This opinion was generally accepted, and special dishes were furnished for Di Blasio from which to eat and drink, as those in charge of him were fearful of infection.

Every day Di Blasio's tongue swelled more, until on Wednesday, when Di Rienzo pleaded and Di Blasio was present in court as a witness. The Judge asked him some questions. Di Blasio's speech was so thick that the jurors couldn't understand him.

"What's the matter with him?" asked the Judge.

"A malignant case of cancer of the tongue," replied a court officer.

"An operation may save him," said the Judge. "Take him to the Harlem Hospital."

The surgeons at the hospital at once set to work, and when the lancet punctured the supposed cancer it struck against a hard substance, which proved to be the bullet which had pierced Di Blasio's cheek and glanced from a tooth into his tongue.

Di Blasio exhibited the bullet proudly yesterday in the District Attorney's office.

PATIENT STABS ORDERLY.

Says He Did It Because the Attendant Spoke Slightingly of His Wife.

John M. Shea, a patient in the alcoholic ward of the Newark (N. J.) City Hospital, stabbed Ernest M. Sacree, an orderly, in the back yesterday with a pair of shears. In explaining his act Shea said he tried to kill the orderly because he had made insulting remarks about Shea's wife when she visited him in the hospital.

Shea, who has been in the City Hospital since February, when he jumped from a tier in the county prison and broke both of his ankles, laid the case before Supt. Charles E. Talbot, who will investigate the charge.

Sacree's wound is trivial.

WOMAN MADE POLICEMAN RUN

When She Said Something About Shooting—Tried and Found Guilty.

Running away from a woman who threatened to shoot him was the charge made against Patrolman William J. O'Brien of the East Fifty-first Street Station yesterday when his trial was called before Deputy Commissioner Hanson at Headquarters. After several witnesses had been examined the patrolman was found guilty, and decision was reserved. O'Brien had gone to 13 Beekman Place with Samuel Levy to serve a subpoena on Mrs. Anna Crack. The woman ordered both men out of the house under threat of shooting. Both ran down the stairs. O'Brien refused to go back when Levy asked him.

Summary.

Hearst net gain on 8 boxes counted yesterday, 17 votes.

Hearst gain on 8 boxes counted previously, 68 votes.

Total Hearst gain on 16 boxes, 85 votes.

The principal features in the Mayoralty recount suit yesterday, which is being tried before Supreme Court Justice Lambert and a jury, were the falling off of Hearst gains for the day, which totaled but 17 for the eight ballot boxes opened, as against 68 for the first eight boxes, and the fact that the last box of the day opened actually showed a gain of 3 votes for McClellan, and this despite the fact that so far all the boxes opened have been specially selected by Clarence J. Shearn as tending to bear out the accusation of fraud in the most pronounced manner. The recount now shows a gain for Hearst of 85 votes from 16 boxes opened, or an average of a little over 5 votes' gain per box.

The gain of 3 for McClellan, which was unexpected, came from the Fifth Election District of the Fourth Assembly District. The official count gave Hearst 174 votes and McClellan 142. One of the McClellan votes was declared void by Justice Lambert, while 4 of those credited to Hearst met with a similar fate. Erasures were responsible for 2 of the latter being cast out, while the other 2 were marked in blue pencil. How the latter ever got by the Tammany election Inspectors at the official count was a matter of much comment.

Eugene Lamb Richards, Mayor McClellan's counsel, was pleased at the result of yesterday's work, saying it bore out fully their contention, that what errors are discovered are merely those caused by the haste with which the count on election night was conducted, and that nowhere has the slightest sign of fraud been found.

That this is borne out, so far as any extensive system under which votes were alleged to have been purchased and marked in a way so that they could be identified afterward is shown by the utter absence of any consistent identifying mark on the disputed ballots submitted to the court. In no instance have two such ballots been marked alike, and it was pointed out yesterday by a McClellan lawyer that it is unreasonable to believe that a different identification mark was given each man whose vote is alleged to have been purchased.

Eliminating fraud by means of votes marked for identification, there remain only two other avenues of fraud. One is that the ballot boxes have been tampered with since they were closed and sealed on election night, the other that the official returns were so manipulated as to show more votes for McClellan than were actually polled, or a corresponding decrease in the Hearst totals. All through the proceedings thus far, Mr. Richards has endeavored to show that it was possible for the boxes to have been tampered with, and as each is opened he calls the jury's attention to the minutest detail which would seem to bear out this contention. The worst in this direction so far seems to be that many of the paper seals are loose, and that one key opens each box.

So far as the possibility of fraud in manipulating the returns goes, there have been two instances so far which the Hearst party holds bears this out. In the returns from the Seventh Election District of the Eighth Assembly District it was found that the figures were about transposed. The official count gave McClellan 163 and Hearst 159. The recount placed Hearst on top with 167, and gave McClellan 156. A similar situation arose in the returns from the Nineteenth Election District of the Fourth Assembly District, where McClellan's official figures of 321 were reduced to 311 on the recount, while Hearst's were increased from 77 to 90.

Justice Lambert said yesterday that, beginning with Monday, four boxes will be opened at a time, and that this number will probably be increased as the counting settles down to a more facile basis. He also announced that the court would sit Saturdays until the recount was finished. He seemed anxious to sit to-day, but eventually decided not to. There is also a likelihood of night sessions if the court does not think sufficient progress is being made in the day.

To Unveil Statue of John Mackay.

ROSLYN, L. I., May 29.—Mr. and Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay will leave Harbor Hill next Wednesday for the West, to be gone a month. Most of the time will be spent at Reno, Nev., for the commencement exercises of the University of Nevada. June 10 will mark the unveiling of a statue of the late John Mackay, father of Mr. Mackay. They will also attend the dedication of the Mackay Mining Building.

Won't Rebuild Betts Academy.

STAMFORD, Conn., May 29.—The close of the school year marks the removal from Stamford of Betts Academy, which for seventy years has been one of the landmarks of this place. W. J. Betts has decided not to rebuild the school (which was destroyed by fire last January) on the old Strawberry Hill site, but to unite its fortunes with those of the Brunswick School of Greenwich.

HUGHES ON FORGED LETTERS.

Governor Will Trace the Origin of the Race Track Petitions.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 29.—Gov. Hughes was told to-day of the results that attended the investigation of the forged letters contained in the multi-colored mail from "constituents" that has reached Senators who voted for the Race-Track bills at the regular session with a view of winning them over to the opposition. He manifested great interest in the case as disclosed in THE TIMES.

While the Governor has not decided upon any definite line of action, as yet, it is certain that the red, blue, yellow, green, pink, brown, and white missives, mailed at the Wall Street Branch of the Post Office, will receive consideration.

The Governor will follow the matter up, so that the people will know the full story about the origin of the letters, even if nobody should be brought to justice for perpetrating this bold deception on the legislators.

Letters similar to those which reached the New York and Brooklyn legislators have been received by a dozen of the up-State Senators. These have been mailed in different parts of the State, a city in the district of the Senator to whom they were directed always being selected. Some of the legislators declare that nearly all the signatures purporting to be those of their own constituents are names of men whom they don't know at all.

Senator Page started for New York last night and took with him the bulk of the race-track correspondence sent to him. Prior to his leaving, he had a conference with Gov. Hughes. Senator Page declared he would not let the matter rest until somebody was made to suffer for the deception practiced on him in the interest of continued gambling at the race tracks.

DECIDES AGAINST JACKSON.

Court Holds State's Payment of $117,000 to Ontario Railroad Was Legal.

ALBANY, N. Y., May 29.—Supreme Court Justice George H. Fitts to-day decided against the contention of Attorney General Jackson that the New York, Ontario & Western Railroad Company must reimburse the State for $117,000 paid the company upon the approval of the old State Canal Board in December, 1906, in settlement of an alleged claim against the State for damages, the route selected for the barge canal having compelled the company to move its tracks and construct a bridge in Oneida County.

The Attorney General sought to have the payment declared an illegal settlement, but Justice Fitts holds that the contract made by the State Board was made without fraud, and that, as the board had the power to make it, it should stand.

HAS CONTROL OVER THAW.

Dr. Ferris Says Lunacy Board Must Sanction Any Removal.

ALBANY, N. Y., May 29.—Dr. A. W. Ferris, President of the State Commission in Lunacy, to-day expressed the opinion that Harry K. Thaw cannot be transferred from Matteawan State Hospital for the Insane without the approval of the commission.

"I hold," said Dr. Ferris to-day, "that before Thaw can be transferred from Matteawan he must secure the consent from the State Commission in Lunacy. The law provides that the commission may order the transfer of a patient at any of the thirteen hospitals for the insane who develops criminal tendencies to Matteawan. Consequently I believe the commission has complete jurisdiction over a patient at Matteawan who has criminal tendencies."

"Do you believe the courts could not require his transfer?" Dr. Ferris was asked.

"I do; I believe the Commission in Lunacy has sole jurisdiction. But that is a legal question, which may have to be decided."

A NEW HOME FOR GIRLS.

Gifts from Carnegie, Mrs. Sage, and Mr. Einstein for Waverly House.

Encouraged by gifts from Andrew Carnegie, Mrs. Russell Sage, Milton Einstein, and others, those interested in the Probation Home for Girls, opened last February at 165 West Tenth Street largely through the efforts of Miss Maude E. Miner, Probation Officer, have decided to make the home a permanent institution, with a Board of Directors, and increased accomodations.

Under the name of the Waverly House, the home is to be conducted henceforth by the New York Probation Association, with these officers: Ex-Judge Charles S. Whitman, President; Mrs. William H. Baldwin, Jr., First Vice President; Dr. Edward T. Devine, Second Vice President; Milton Einstein, Treasurer, and Miss Miner, Secretary. These officers and Mrs. William B. Rice, Mrs. V. G. Simkovitch, Miss Stella A. Miner, Judge Charles S. MacLean, Magistrate Kernochan, Magistrate Corrigan, Homer Folks, and John M. Glenn comprise the Board of Directors.

When the home was opened but two floors of the dwelling at 165 West Tenth Street were engaged; now the entire house has been leased for a year. Mr. Einstein had pledged $600 for the rent, and Mr. Carnegie gave the remaining $750 needed to pay for the house for a year. Mrs. Sage gave $500, and other smaller contributions have been received, making a total of $7,865 of the necessary $10,000 for the year's expenses.

Kills Swimming Boy with Piece of Ice.

The disappearance on Wednesday of 14-year-old Edward Doherty of 31 Amity Street, Brooklyn, was cleared up yesterday, when, the police say, Bartelle Ceratto of 25 Columbia Street told them that Doherty had gone swimming with him and Carwello Ufargo, 14, of 35 Pacific Street, and that Ufargo had playfully thrown a piece of ice, picked up from the pier, at Doherty, striking him on the head. The boy sank and his body was not recovered. The police arrested the other lads.

Say Dog Who Bit Pupils Had Rabies.

According to a report from the Pasteur Institute, the dog which on Thursday bit three children at Public School 23, in Richmond, had true rabies. The autopsy performed by the Department of Health experts yesterday proved this. The three children, all of whom live in Mariners' Harbor, Richmond, were ordered to the hospital for Pasteur treatment immediately after being injured.

ONLY 613 FOR BRYAN AT DENVER, ANTIS SAY

SAY THEY'LL CONTROL 383

They Declare That They Will Be Able to Nominate a "Dark Horse" if They Can't Get Johnson.

Democratic politicians of this State who are opposed to the nomination of William J. Bryan at the Denver Convention have figured out that, with the delegates already chosen as a basis, it will be possible to block the Nebraskan in the control of the convention. They assert that, in addition to the 480 delegates already instructed for Bryan, he cannot get more than 133 more, which will give him a total of 613. That is 55 less than the two-thirds required to nominate.

On the other hand, they figure out that if the Johnson people can control the 258 uninstructed delegates already chosen, and secure, as they believe they will, 125 additional delegates, either uninstructed or pledged to vote for Johnson, they will have a total in the convention of 383 delegates opposed to Bryan, which will mean that he cannot be nominated on the first ballot.

It is figured by these politicians that if they can control 383 delegates they will be able entirely to block Bryan's nomination, and even if it is not possible to get the votes necessary to nominate Johnson, they will at least be able to force the running of a "dark horse" and eliminate Bryan from the fight.

Bryan's 480 Delegates.

Delegates have already been instructed for Bryan in the following States;

Alaska	6	Ohio	46
Alabama	22	Oklahoma	14
Arizona	6	South Carolina	18
California	20	South Dakota	8
Illinois	54	Texas	36
Indiana	30	Washington	10
Iowa	26	West Virginia	14
Kansas	20	Wisconsin	26
Massachusetts	24	Wyoming	6
Missouri	36
Nebraska	16	Total	480
North Dakota	8

The States which have chosen uninstructed delegates to the convention and the number of such delegates chosen so far are:

Connecticut	14	New Jersey	24
Delaware	6	New York	78
Florida	10	Pennsylvania	68
Maine	12	Rhode Island	8
Minnesota	22
Massachusetts	8	Total	258
New Hampshire	8

There is a contest on for 6 delegates in the District of Columbia.

Allowing for some Bryan votes from the States of Connecticut, Pennsylvania, and Rhode Island, it is figured that it will be essential for him to have the following States to secure the nomination: Georgia, 26; Louisiana, 18; North Carolina, 24, and Virginia, 24, making a total of 92. It is claimed that these States, with Maryland, 16; Montana, 6, and Vermont, 8, a total of 122, will defeat Bryan.

Bryan May Get 133 More.

It is figured that from the conventions yet to be held Bryan will get these delegates from the following States:

Idaho	6	Utah	6
Arkansas	18	Tennessee	22
Oregon	8	Nevada	6
New Mexico	6	Colorado	5
Kentucky	26
Virginia	8	Total	133
Mississippi	20

It is figured that Johnson will get these delegates from these States and Territories, whose conventions are yet to be held:

Porto Rico	6	Georgia	26
Maryland	16	North Carolina	24
Louisiana	18	Vermont	8
Montana	6
Virginia	16	Total	125
Colorado	5

This will leave the result Bryan, 613, uninstructed, and therefore presumably opposed to Bryan, 383, which would leave Bryan with 55 votes less than the number required to nominate.

BRYAN DENIES A RUMOR.

Says He Hasn't Discussed Democratic Convention Committee Chairmanship.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, Neb., May 29.—William J. Bryan is on a speaking tour in Nebraska and South Dakota. A message to him regarding the statement made to-day to the effect that he had given his consent that Judge Parker should be Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions at the Denver Convention brought the following reply:

Verdal, Neb., May 29.
Have not discussed Chairmanship of Resolutions Committee. W. J. BRYAN.

Mr. Bryan spoke to-night at Bonesteel, S. D. He is scheduled for twenty-four speeches during the trip, which will end Wednesday afternoon.

LINCOLN, Neb., May 29.—Friends of William J. Bryan to-day scoffed at the statement that former Judge Alton B. Parker will be Chairman of the Resolutions Committee at the National Democratic Convention.

BURTON TO NAME TAFT.

Seconding Speeches by Senators Dolliver, Borah, and Knight.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—While no formal announcement has yet been made, it is stated definitely here that Representative Theodore E. Burton of Ohio will present the name of Secretary Taft to the Chicago Convention.

Representative Burton, since the institution of Secretary Taft's campaign, has been one of his closest advisers. Mr. Burton will leave Washington in two or three days for Hot Springs, Va., to take a rest. While he is there he probably will prepare his nominating address.

Senator Dolliver of Iowa will make a seconding speech on Mr. Taft's nomination. Other seconding speeches will be delivered by George Knight of California, Senator Borah of Idaho, and probably by Senator Long of Kansas.

I. J. Dunn to Nominate Bryan.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—It was stated here to-day on reliable authority that I. J. Dunn, Assistant City Attorney of Omaha, Neb., will place William J. Bryan in nomination for the Presidency at the Denver Convention. Among those who will second the nomination will be Representative J. Thomas Heflin of Alabama.

Customs Receipts for May $12,303,742.

The customs receipts for this port during the month of May, just ended were $12,303,742. In spite of the business depression the receipts hold up well, and, according to Col. Fowler, Collector of the Port, the outlook for import business is very bright. However, the figures for this month are below those for the same period last year, and it is not expected that the annual figures will be as high as in the last fiscal year.

Fifty-three Haffen Employes Dropped.

Fifty-three men employed by the city and assigned to work under Borough President Haffen in the Bronx were dropped from the payrolls yesterday. The men were mostly engineers and rodmen. Fourteen were in the Department of Highways, twenty-two in the Topographical Department, and seventeen in the Sewer Department. The salaries of the discharged men ranged from $1,500 to $1,950 a year.

TAFT SPEAKS ON PANAMA.

Guest of the Board of Trade of Norwich, Conn.

NORWICH, Conn., May 29.—Secretary of War William H. Taft was the guest this evening of the Norwich Board of Trade, and addressed a large audience. Upon arrival in this city the Secretary, with Congressmen Lilley and Higgins of this State, were taken to the Wauregan, where they were introduced to many citizens.

Secretary Taft then went to the theatre and talked on "Panama." His speech in part was devoted to observations on his recent trip to the Canal Zone.

Taft Men Going to Chicago Anyway.

Price, George E. Stevens, and Charles H. Boynton of this city, and Martin Heermance of Poughkeepsie. No arrangements have been made for headquarters in Chicago.

BRITAIN MAY ENTER NEW TRIPLE ALLIANCE

Union with France and Russia Discussed During the Visit of President Fallieres.

KING TO TALK WITH CZAR

Much Opposition to the Plan Among Englishmen — President Fallieres Returns to France.

LONDON, May 29.—With the conclusion of the visit to England of President Fallières of France, increased attention is being paid to the question whether the conversations between King Edward and President Fallières and the British and French Foreign Ministers will lead to the development of the existing entente between Great Britain and France into an alliance in which Russia will be a party.

At the conference between Sir Edward Grey, British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and M. Pichon, the French Foreign Minister, the subject of a more formal agreement between their respective countries and the coming visit of King Edward to Emperor Nicholas were discussed. King Edward, as well as Sir Charles Hardinge, Permanent Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs and ex-British Ambassador to Russia, who will accompany the King, will be able to place before the Russian Emperor the views, not only of their own country, but those of France on the subject of a closer understanding between Great Britain, France, and Russia.

King Edward and the British Government, it is believed, favor a military alliance and the further isolation of Germany, but there is much opposition in this country to such an agreement on the ground that it would necessitate an increased military expenditure and possibly conscription, and also would lead Great Britain into Continental quarrels in which she was not interested. A majority of the press and public are saying that it would be better for Great Britain to leave well enough alone and devote her efforts to assuring the continuance of the entente with France.

A Continental diplomat, discussing the matter to-day, said:

"Englishmen seem to forget (or don't they know?) that, although not allied to France, Great Britain more than once since Morocco has occupied the political stage, has notified Germany that an attack on France would be considered an affront to Great Britain. They would not have to do more than that under an alliance, for, without an alliance, after issuing such an ultimatum, they would be forced to defend France if she were attacked."

The inclusion of Russia in an agreement with Great Britain and France would raise another obstacle, as the Laborites and many Radicals are strongly opposed to any dealings with Russia until a change is made in the interior Government of that country.

Foreign Secretary Grey last Thursday in the House of Commons, when a question was put to him on the subject, attempted to reassure his questioner by declaring that no Minister would accompany King Edward on his visit to Russia, and that no negotiations were pending for a new convention between the two countries, nor was it intended to initiate negotiations for one during the trip. But the presence of Sir Charles Hardinge at the King's side convinces the followers of foreign affairs that something in the nature of an agreement is purposed.

PARIS, May 29.—The triumphant reception accorded President Fallieres in England has created the most intense satisfaction in official circles in France. Nevertheless, no official encouragement is given to the talk of a formal alliance.

"An alliance in spirit, if not in letter, already exists," an official of the Foreign Office said to-day, "and we are content for the moment to allow the entente to develop along natural lines."

At the same time the forthcoming visits of King Edward and President Fallieres to Emperor Nicholas in St. Petersburg are expected to clinch the bonds between the three countries, and perhaps lead to the formation of a new "Triple Alliance" for the "preservation of the peace of Europe." A movement for such a combination is being actively promoted on both sides of the Channel.

The Temps, in its issue of this afternoon, says it now regards the security of France as assured.

"The time when Germany could occupy France as a hostage in a war with England is past," the paper says. "Russia is again on her feet. If Germany attacks France the Russo-French military convention immediately becomes operative and a Russian army would move against the German rear. Whether the Anglo-French entente is transformed into an alliance or simply retains its present intimate diplomatic character, France is in no peril. She need no longer be alarmed at the menaces of the Pan-German press."

CALAIS, May 29.—President Fallieres landed here at 2 o'clock this afternoon, returning from his official visit of four days to England. He left London this morning after a warm farewell. He made the return trip in one of the regular Channel steamers instead of the cruiser Leon Gambetta on account of the bad weather. He left on a special train for Paris.

MILLER REPUDIATES LETTER.

Document Offered by Mae C. Wood Declared to be a Forgery.

PARIS, May 29.—J. Martin Miller, the former American Consul at Rheims, who was mentioned in connection with the suit for divorce recently brought in New York by Mae C. Wood against Senator Thomas C. Platt, is at present in this city. When the latest American newspapers arrived here to-day Mr. Miller saw for the first time the statement alleged to have been signed by him, and which was produced by Miss Wood at the trial. Mr. Miller was extremely indignant.

"The document is an absolute forgery," he said. "It is false from beginning to end."

Mr. Miller is consulting attorneys with the view of having Miss Wood prosecuted for forgery.

Mae C. Wood swore in her testimony before Supreme Court Justice O'Gorman that Mr. Miller called on her at the Victoria Hotel in this city on Oct. 12, 1903, and after showing a Secret Service badge "took possession of her," and next morning led her to Hummel's office, where she was obliged to give up her Platt letters under duress, in exchange for $10,000.

The document referred to in the above dispatch is the letter offered in evidence by Mrs. Wood signed "J. Martin Miller," saying he was "asked by high Government officials at Washington and New York to get possession of Senator Platt's love letters to Mae C. Wood." It then describes methods adopted in carrying this out, and concludes by saying: "I was got into the conspiracy by powerful officials whom I would not dare to displease from a newspaper or political standpoint."

POLAR CONGRESS MEETS.

Herbert L. Bridgman Represents the United States at Brussels.

BRUSSELS, May 29.—Twelve countries, including the United States, were represented by delegates at the International Polar Congress, which met here to-day. Herbert L. Bridgman, President of the Department of Geography in the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, represented the United States.

The object of the congress is to create an international association for the study of the polar regions, first, to obtain an international agreement upon questions relating to polar geography; second, to organize a concerted effort to reach the north pole; third, to organize an expedition for the extension of polar research in all directions, and fourth, to prepare a programme of scientific work during polar expeditions.

The congress appointed to-day an international committee, on which Mr. Bridgman has a place.

ANARCHY REIGNS IN PERSIA.

Russians Probably Will Be Compelled to Continue Military Operations.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 29.—Reports published in certain London newspapers regarding the possibility of a rupture of diplomatic relations between Russia and Persia are discredited at the Foreign Office and the Persian Legation here. At both places the official view is optimistic regarding the ability of the Shah's Government to restore order in the border provinces before June 10, the time limit of the Russian ultimatum.

Reports received here from Teheran and other points in Persia, however, declare that complete anarchy reigns. The Government is without power to punish the tribesmen, as demanded in the Russian ultimatum, and it is believed that the Russian detachment ultimately will be compelled to resume operations in Azerbaijan Province.

Russia does not desire permanent or semi-permanent occupation of Persian territory, but prefers a policy of punishment and retirement across the frontier similar to that adopted by Great Britain in Northwest India.

HAD A RUSSIAN "REPUBLIC."

Trial of Men Who Organized Independent Government in the Caucasus.

NOVOROSSYSK, Russia, May 29.—The trial began here to-day before a military court of 110 men charged with having organized and established in December, 1905, during the revolutionary movement the "Novorossysk Republic." It maintained an independent existence for several weeks, raised a small army, and federated with two other "republics" in the Caucasus. The army had started to march to Rostoff-on-the-Don, intending to proceed thence to St. Petersburg, before the movement was crushed.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 29.—A revolutionist named Traubner and one of his emissaries, a man named Massakin, were executed here to-day. Traubner was taken into custody on the Finnish border, charged with instigating the murder of Lieut. Gen. Vladimir Pavloff and Gen. Maximoffsky, and Massakin was arrested while attempting to gain access to M. Chtcheglovitoff, the Minister of Justice.

TEST BY WRIGHTS ABROAD.

France May Accept Their Aeroplane as a Result of Them.

PARIS, May 29.—Wilbur Wright, the aeronaut, one of the Wright brothers of Dayton, Ohio, arrived in this city to-day from America. The European representative of the Wrights, Hart O. Berg of Philadelphia, says the purpose of Mr. Wright's visit is to demonstrate in Europe the capabilities of the Wright machine.

The preliminary arrangements for the demonstrations are complete, a suitable inclosed field, two miles square, having been secured in Western France. Several weeks probably will be required to get the machine in order.

The important features of the invention have now been protected by European patents. The French Government, it is stated, has offered to buy the exclusive European rights for three years provided the machine, carrying the weight of two men, flies thirty miles, returning to the point of departure.

MANY KOREANS KILLED.

Japanese Officials Believe the Rebellion Will Soon Be Crushed.

SEOUL, Korea, May 29.—According to military reports, a total of fifty-three engagements was fought in May in the campaign of the Japanese forces against Korean insurgents, and 549 insurgents were killed, many wounded, and a large number captured. The Japanese lost thirty killed. The insurgents invariably outnumbered the Japanese forces 5 to 1.

Many of the Korean insurgents who have given the Japanese administration much trouble are surrendering. At the Japanese military headquarters it is confidently predicted that the entire disturbing element in Korea will be subdued within sixty days.

Notes of Foreign Affairs.

HELGOLAND, May 29.—The Crown Prince of Germany, Frederick William, is here on board the flagship Deutschland participating for the first time in the regular manoeuvres of the German fleet in the North Sea. Seventy warships of all classes have been mobilized, and the coast defenses also are to join in the manoeuvres, which will last until June 6.

MADRID, May 29.—The report that King Alfonso purposed to visit Berlin and Vienna this Summer has been officially denied.

LIMA, Peru, May 29.—Senor Leguia, the President elect of Peru, to-day received a cablegram from Secretary Root, who, in his own name and that of his wife, congratulated him upon his election and wished him a profitable and glorious administration.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 29.—Reports received to-day at the Admiralty here show that the damage to the battleship Peter the Great, which ran on the rocks yesterday near Reval, is less serious than was at first supposed. The battleship's sheathing below the waterline and near the bow has been considerably torn, but the cost of repairs will not exceed $10,000 or $12,000.

FOREIGN MINISTER TOASTS MRS. TOWER

Ambassador's Wife, Behind Curtains, Hears Herself Praised at Berlin Dinner.

GIVEN FOR HER HUSBAND

Americans and Germans Join in Farewell Function to the Retiring American Representative.

BERLIN, May 29.—German and American friends of Charlemagne Tower, the retiring American Ambassador to Germany, to the number of more than one hundred, gave a dinner to the Ambassador at the Hotel Adlon in this city tonight. The dinner, which was by subscription, was originated and carried through by the American Association of Commerce and Trade on behalf of the American community resident in Berlin, but many of Mr. Tower's friends took part.

Ministers and other eminent Germans were present. After the healths of President Roosevelt and Emperor William had been drunk, the Prince von Pless proposed the health of Ambassador Tower, and the ceremony was observed with many evidences of good-will. The Prince said Germany had benefited by Mr. Tower's labors, especially his work in preparing the way for the tariff agreement with the United States.

The date of Mr. Tower's farewell audience with Emperor William has not yet been fixed, although he lodged his request with the Foreign Office some weeks ago.

Mr. Tower recently received a letter from President Roosevelt couched in cordial terms.

Foreign Minister Von Schoen requested the permission of the Chairman to make a few remarks. He proposed the health of Mrs. Tower, who, he said, had during her residence here, shown herself to be a model of domestic virtue. Though he regretted the departure of Ambassador Tower he regretted three-fold her leaving.

It chanced that Mrs. Tower, in a curtained loge with a number of other ladies of the Embassy, heard the toast, which was drunk standing amid the cheering of the dinner party.

MANY KILLED IN SAMOS.

Fighting Still Continues and Turkish Troops Are Gathering to Stop It.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 29.—Consular dispatches received here from the Island of Samos declare that not less than 150 persons have been killed or wounded in the fighting that has been going on at Vathy, the capital of the island, for the last four days, and that the engagements still continue.

The Turkish Government is arranging to send in large reinforcements of troops from the naval division to overawe the rebellious islanders. The insurgents have the support of the local gendarmerie.

ATHENS, May 29.—The Turkish Government has demanded the recall of the Greek Consul on the Island of Samos, accusing him of aiding and abetting the revolt against the Prince of Samos and the Governor of the island. The Greek Government has asked the Porte to specify the grounds for complaint against the Consul.

The Greek transport Sphacteria has been sent to Samos to take off the refugees.

Turkish troops and warships are due to arrive to-day at Chios, a Turkish island near Samos, where they have been ordered to concentrate.

His Counsel Pleads Self-Defense in the Shooting of Cabman.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—In a strong address pleading self-defense in justification of Gaston Philip, well known in society here, who, on the morning of May 18, 1907, shot and killed Frank Macaboy, a cab driver, in the corridor of the Arlington Hotel, Henrie Davis, Philip's counsel, opened the case for the defense this morning.

In the outline of his client's case, Mr. Davis not only declared that he would prove that Macaboy was actually making an attack on Mr. Philip when he was shot, but that for days before he had been on the clubman's trail, winning his money with loaded dice, and threatening him with bodily harm.

Testimony was introduced to show that Macaboy intruded himself into a party with whom Philip spent the night carousing, and won all his money and some of his jewelry, with loaded dice.

At one saloon the bartender took the dice from Macaboy and replaced them with fair ones. With the new set of dice Philip won his jewelry back and $150 of the money he had lost. Macaboy talked of the $150 constantly, Mr. Davis said, until when a short hour later he cornered Philip in the Arlington, handled him roughly, advanced on him again, and was shot to death by Philip, who was in fear for his life."

City Justice Involved in Sewer Scandal

The interest of the Brooklyn May Grand Jury was revived yesterday in the case involving charges reflecting on a municipal Justice in connection with the sewer claim frauds, when the presentation of several "dead" indictments was made to Judge Dike in the County Court. There has been much talk since Lawyer William O. Miles and his clerk, Charles M. Wells, were sent to Blackwell's Island for conspiring to defraud the city on a confession by some one as yet untried and not even indicted.

HEART DISEASE KILLED HOLME

Persons Held in Connection with Boston Merchant's Death Released.

Heart failure, due to kidney and other diseases, was the cause of the sudden death of Charles M. Holme in the Hoffman House on Thursday night, according to the report of Coroner's Physician Weston yesterday, who performed an autopsy on the body. Coroner Dooley then ordered the release of the four persons who had been arrested and detained in connection with Mr. Holme's death. Mr. Holme was a member of the firm of Holme & Kimball, leather merchants of Boston. He was 72 years old, and was once a Director of several Boston banks.

Mr. Holme left Boston for New York on Thursday morning, and soon after he arrived at the Hoffman House in the afternoon he went out. Evidently he went to the apartment of Clara Moore, who lives on the second floor of the house at 120 West Forty-seventh Street. He became ill there and was put in a taxicab, in which he returned to the hotel, where he died. Later on the police arrested the Moore woman, her maid, the elevator boy at the apartment house, and the chauffeur.

JEALOUS, HE COMES TO KILL.

French Suitor on Way Here to Find Girl Who Spurned His Love.

The representatives of the French Government here have received word that a man named Jean Lazare is bound from Marseilles to this port on murder bent. He is said to be infatuated with his niece and has sworn that unless the girl consents to marry him he will kill her.

The help of the Federal Government has been invoked to prevent his landing, and the immigration officials have been warned to keep a lookout on every incoming liner for Lazare. The girl, it is believed, lives in New Jersey.

Lazare formerly lived in France within a few miles of the Italian border. His niece, Clara Rapaport, is said to be an exceptionally pretty girl. She came to this country some time ago with relatives. Lazare, it seems, had annoyed her by his attentions, and she would not listen to his entreaties to run away with him. Before she left for America he made a last appeal to her, and when she repulsed him became jealous, and showing a knife swore that he would kill the girl before she would marry another.

Since her arrival he has written several letters to her, and finally announced that he was coming over either to marry or kill her.

JUDGE AS A PEACEMAKER.

Hopes Less Club Life for Husband May Reconcile Wife.

In deferring his decision for a week on the application by Mrs. Hilda Bar for alimony and counsel fee pending the trial of her action for a separation from her husband, Emil Bar, Supreme Court Justice Greenbaum took unto himself the rôle of peacemaker yesterday, and in the hope of effecting a reconciliation of the young couple, said:

"The defendant's own affidavit indicates that he has permitted most absurd and childish reasons to alienate him from his wife, who, doubtless being very youthful and inexperienced, responded in kind. Less activity on the part of the defendant at political clubs at night and more attention to his young wife, together with a reasonable amount of consideration and forbearance on the part of both, may result in a reconciliation. Perhaps, too, the parents-in-law would not appear so officious toward the defendant if he realized his own shortcomings. The motion will be held in abeyance for a week to enable the parties to arrive at an amicable understanding."

Mrs. Bar sued through her father, Samuel Ornstein, as guardian ad litem.

THOUGHT DIAMONDS GLASS.

Honest Young Grocery Clerk, When He Did Learn Their Value, Returned Them

A purse containing diamonds and jewelry belonging to Mrs. W. P. Sullivan of 198 Clermont Avenue, Brooklyn, and believed to have been stolen, was returned to her yesterday. John Rosenbaum, 15 years old, a grocery clerk, found the purse in Cumberland Street, where it had dropped from the bag containing it.

When Rosenbaum examined his find he thought the trinkets were glass. A woman to whom he delivered some goods told him of their value.

Rosenbaum turned over the jewels to Mr. Sullivan yesterday, who gave him a reward.

EVERYTHING GONE UP BUT THE AIRSHIP

Queens Great Fair That Was to Be, but Wasn't and Isn't, Ends in a Fizzle.

MULTITUDES STAYED AWAY

Concessionaires Reckon Up a Loss of $10,000 and the District Attorney Hears Their Sad Tale.

The uneven and lonesome looking lot out in Grand Street, Maspeth, L. I., which answers to the official name of Feldman's Driving Park was sad and gloomy yesterday. The weather contributed a little to the general despondency of the background, foreground, and middle distance of the landscape. Here and there two men or sometimes a man and a woman conversed together in whispers, stopping long enough every now and then to shake their fists and mutter angrily.

A week ago little did any of the men and women present yesterday think that Feldman's Driving Park would present the spectacle that it did. Yesterday was to have been the next to the last day of the "Queens County Fair," (under new management, and these people, concessionaires and employes, had counted on being busily occupied to-day raking in the nickels and dimes of the mammoth Memorial Day and final day multitudes. But about all that was doing yesterday was a gang of workmen pulling up the last stakes of the merry-go-round tent and a rumbling over by the Pavilion and Casino, where Feldman and his son-in-law were loading back into a big wagon the kegs of beer that had been ordered for the crowds that never came.

Yes, and Elmer Van Vanken, the Gloversville (N. Y.) aeronaut, who, as advertised, had been obtained by the management at a "fabulous sum" to make daily flights in his airship over to New York, around the tower of the Times Building and back each day of the fair, with an equally fabulous forfeit for each time he did not accomplish the feat, was pottering about his machine with several assistants over in one corner. When he was asked if he was "going up" he replied gravely and as one inspired, "No, I think not. I can't get the gas. There has been so much gas used up in this fair already that there don't seem to be any left," and he turned sadly away.

There is practically nothing but Mr. Van Vanken and his machine left of the fair that never came off. "Long Feather" and his "Kickapoo Indian Band" have folded their tents and silently stolen away. "Aljova," the Wild Girl, has returned to the wilds of West Thirty-seventh Street. The Loop-the-Loop man is down at Coney Island trying to get a job. The owner of the Colossal Equine was last seen leading that beast dejectedly along the road toward Long Island City. And the Italian Band (by special engagement) is forgetting its sorrows in Mulberry Street. The Midway and the Bowery are no more. In fact, the Queens County Fair (under new management) has vanished from the face of the map.

A bit of the gloom and quiet of the vacant lot was reflected in Broadway, where is the elegant and sumptuous suite of offices on the fifth floor of the Knickerbocker Theatre Building, on the door of which appears in big black letters, were closed and silent. The door, with its inscription, was evidently locked. The elevator man and other persons in the building seemed to think it a good joke when they were asked where Mr. Tomasso could be found.

G. W. TOMASSO,
THEATRICAL ENTERPRISES.
QUEENS COUNTY FAIR ASSOCIATION.

A mass meeting was held at the park on Thursday afternoon, which was attended by nearly all the concession holders of the fair that was to be, Feldman himself, the airship man, the side show people, and an interesting group of fourteen young women who had been engaged to act in diferent capacities around the grounds, and had put up $100 cash bond apiece. A reporter was elected secretary, and it was found that the fair that never came off had cost them about $10,000. After much speechmaking it was decided to move on the District Attorney's office and see what they could do about it. A time was set yesterday morning, but evidently the majority of them did not wish to let their friends know how easily they had been deceived. Only six of the girls appeared, and they talked with Assistant District Attorney Bosler. He listened attentively, and then they went away. After the interview he was non-committal as to the course he was going to pursue, but appeared to be interested in the fair that was to be but never was.

Anyway, Van Vanken says he will come over and take a look at the top of the Times Building to-day.

City Accepts Portrait of Robert Haws.

A portrait of Robert Haws, Controller of the city from 1859 to 1863, has been presented to the city by his descendants. It was submitted to the Municipal Art Commission by Controller Metz and was pronounced by that body to be one of the finest works of art in the possession of the municipality, although the artist is not known. It will be hung in the Controller's office.

Mrs. Katharine C. Weidenfeld, wife of Camille Weidenfeld, transferred yesterday the Weidenfeld residence at 3 East Fifty-first Street to Charles S. Hinchman for a nominal consideration. The house, which stands on a frontage of 32.6 feet, adjoins the Union Club, and is opposite St. Patrick's Cathedral. Mrs. Weidenfeld bought it in 1904.

WAINWRIGHT'S FLAG GOES UP.

Is Now Acting Rear Admiral—Albany Leads Cruisers in Target Work.

TACOMA, Wash., May 29.—Richard Wainwright is now an Acting Rear Admiral, commanding the second division of the Atlantic battleship fleet.

Rear Admiral Wainwright's flag was raised to-day. He will receive his commission as a full Rear Admiral in July.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 29.—The first division of the Atlantic battleship fleet will return to San Francisco Sunday. All of the fleet will be assembled here for several days before the date of sailing for Honolulu on July 7.

The cruiser South Dakota of the Pacific Squadron left here to-day for Santa Barbara and San Pedro, and will remain for some time cruising in Southern waters. For the first time in the history of the Mare Island station a ship of the class of the Missouri anchored alongside of the quay wall, thus disproving the statement that first-class battleships cannot be docked at Mare Island.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The cruiser Albany, the gunboat Wilmington, and the torpedo boat Perry were the trophy winners in their respective classes in the annual record target practice at one mile for 1908, according to the results announced at the Navy Department to-day.

The Albany had a final merit of 76, with the St. Louis at 69, and the Charleston at 67, as star ships. The Wilmington's final merit was 67. The Perry had a final merit of 68. Star ships are those that attain at least 85 per cent. of the final merit of the trophy winners.

In the standing of fleets, the Pacific fleet leads with a final merit of 60, the Atlantic fleet being next with 55. It is said that in the percentage of hits and rapidity of firing, the records show approximately double those of 1903.

NEW TEST FOR AUTO LAW.

Constitutionality of Jersey Statute Attacked Now in State Courts.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., May 29.—Another move was made here to-day by a New York automobile company to test the constitutionality of the Frelinghuysen automobile law, when Richard E. H. Johnson, an employe of the company, was fined $100 for failing to have a Jersey license on his machine. He was bailed in $200 and an appeal taken from the judgment of the police Magistrate to the Court of Common Pleas.

Johnson is the man who sought to got his case in the Federal Court last week by habeas corpus proceedings, but failed. The company will now fight the law in the State courts.

A digest of counsels' objections to the law, which was overruled here, is:

First: That the tax of $10 a year which the New Jersey law demands of a non-resident owner of an automobile is a revenue tax and not a license fee, and imposes an unconstitutional restriction upon the privilege of a non-resident citizen to enter the State of New Jersey, thereby infringing his liberty as guaranteed in the Federal Constitution.

Second: That the tax of $10 constitutes an unconstitutional tax on inter-State commerce, violating the Federal Constitution, which places inter-State commerce within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States Government.

Third: That this court has no power to impose a fine, as directed by the New Jersey statutes, since the New Jersey tax is a revenue tax, this proceeding being non-criminal in its nature, and if the court imposes a penalty under the revenue tax it is exercising the power of taxation, which is exclusively delegated to the legislative department of the Government.

SHAM BATTLE FOR CARDINAL.

Special Drill in His Honor When He Inspects a Mission School To-day.

Cardinal Logue will go to the Mission of the Immaculate Virgin, at Mount Loretto, S. I., to-day, as the guest of the Rev. N. J. Fitzpatrick, the rector. The mission cares for 2,000 homeless children and teaches them trades. It was established by the late Father Drumgoole.

The Cardinal and his party will leave South Ferry at 11 o'clock, and will take a special train from St. George. Upon arrival at Mount Loretto the mission band will meet the Cardinal and escort him and his party to the St. Elizabeth Home for the Blind, where they will have dinner. After dinner an inspection of the trade schools will be made.

The party will include Archbishop Farley, Bishop Cusack, Mgrs. Lavelle, McGean, Mooney, Edwards, McKenna, and Hayes; the Rev. Dr. Bryan, and a number of prominent laymen.

One of the features of the entertainment of the Cardinal will be a sham battle between detachments of the battalion of the Clason Point Military Academy, which will give a special drill in his honor.

McINTYRE TRIAL ON JUNE 11.

Bankrupt's Counsel Objects to Early Date and May Try to Delay Case.

On motion of Assistant District Attorney Train, Judge Foster yesterday fixed June 11 as the date for the trial of Thomas A. McIntyre, head of the bankrupt brokerage firm of McIntyre & Co. McIntyre is under five indictments for grand larceny—four in the first degree and one in the second.

George L. Lewis, Mr. McIntyre's counsel, objected to so early a date, pleading that he needed more time to prepare his case, and thought he was entitled to it. He intimated he might endeavor to secure a postponement.

Mr. Lewis asked Mr. Train on which indictment he intended to try his client first. Mr. Train said that he proposed to begin with the first indictment, which accuses McIntyre of the larceny of sixty shares of United States Steel preferred stock from Mrs. Ellen J. Sedgewick of Hartford, Conn.

United States Commissioner Alexander Gilchrist, Jr., said yesterday that he understood that the testimony of Miss Anna B. Boyd had been taken in the McIntyre bankruptcy proceedings, but that the official stenographer will not file it until the hearing closes, in conformity with the order in the case.

Miss Boyd is the nurse to whom Thomas A. McIntyre, on the witness stand on Thursday, admitted he had given part of his dead wife's jewelry and an automobile.

HOWARD GOULD CAN'T APPEAL.

Court Decision Against Him on One Point of Wife's Separation Suit.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court denied yesterday the motion of Howard Gould to go to the Court of Appeals over questions of law involved in the suit brought by his wife, Katherine Clemmons Gould, for separation and support.

Mr. Gould obtained an order in the lower court permitting him to take the testimony of Helen Mar, a former friend of his wife, concerning the alleged relations existing between Col. William F. Cody and Mrs. Gould before her marriage, but Mrs. Gould succeeded in having this testimony stricken out by the Appellate Division. Mr. Gould then moved for an appeal, and it was a denial of this motion that was handed down yesterday.

Property Condemnation Inquiry.

At the request of Corporation Counsel Pendleton, the Commissioners of Accounts are about to investigate the methods pursued by the city in condemnation proceedings. According to Controller Metz, the city is already pledged to condemn $100,000,000 of property, and $13,000,000 is condemned every year. Under Mayor Low, Corporation Counsel Rives exposed many abuses that had grown up in the condemnation of property in connection with improvements in the Bronx.

New York..	18	16	.529	Brooklyn...	13	21	.382

Guess he was just holding back for bets, this Mathewson person. He drove into Brooklyn Borough yesterday and unloaded at Washington Park the choicest collection of knockout drops that has been dealt since Amos Rusie was doing a specialty. You might almost call it an act in one, for in addition to leading eight of the Brooklyn brigade a dog's life our prodigal son slammed many a midget out at first. Maybe that's adding sneer to sarcasm. Whatever it was, he did it, and we're going to take him back to our bosom and call him "Matty" once again.

"And they said he'd gone back," said Charley Ebbets, with tears in his eyes as big as rain checks.

"They say that about every great man," said James Corbett, the actor, who promenaded very prettily along the upper concourse. "I remember very well myself one time a guy got to me on a fluke, but when I had recovered——"

"Excuse me, please," begged Mr. Ebbets. "I think Lumley is going to fan again, and I have something to say to him."

Matty started right in to show his prowess in the first inning, and he kept up the exposure for the whole game. He was a bit nervous-like at first, but that was only natural after the way he's been called out of his name in the last few weeks. He walked Lumley in the first, and that was the best Lumley ever got off him, unless you count a caught fly, and don't let's. Sheehan struck out in that first inning, and by the time this was done the side was out. In the second and third innings the representatives of the foolish borough went out in one, two, three order, and this put Matty in such rare good humor that in the fourth he forgot his manners completely and struck 'em out three in a row, just like that. Lumley, of course, and then Jordan, and then Sheehan.

That was just to celebrate a little happening in the Giants' half of the fourth, and Matty didn't let it occur again. As he was strong, so was he merciful. He toned himself down in the sixth inning and positively refused to strike out the side. No amount of pleading would prevail. Fred Knowles wigwagged him from the grand stand, but Matty signaled back, no. He wasn't going to overstep the bounds of decency. If Knowles wanted another set of three struck out, Knowles might sign another hireling. The best Matty would do was to strike out Lumley and Jordan. It was very disappointing work from this pitcher, and the only way he squared himself was by throwing out the other man, Burch, at first. Obstinate cuss, this Bix Six.

For the remainder of the game. Matty wasn't very active. He could strike out only Maloney in the seventh and Bergen in the eighth. To be sure, he put out Burch at first in the eighth, and Jordan at first in the ninth, but these are scarcely worth the mention.

The only run that figured on the score came our way in the fourth as the result of some very hitful endeavors by our returned wanderers. Donlin started the séance by hitting clean to centre, and advanced on Seymour's sacrifice bunt. Needham banged out two bases to centre, and that was where Donlin scored. He had been doing a lot of second-story work in anticipation of the hit, and so he didn't have far to run when the blowoff came.

Donlin, two innings later, retired from activities. He had hit over to Sheehan, who whipped it down to first. Donlin allowed he was safe on the bag. Umpire Rudderham spoke up in a still, small voice, saying this impression was erroneous. Over on the grounds at Highland Park or 155th Street, Donlin might have used language, but in the peaceful stretches of Washington Park, he never forgot his bringing up. "Have you, by chance," he suggested, "an acquaintance with Old Doctor Georgen, the oculist?"

"Such is not my good fortune," returned Mr. Rudderham, "why do you ask?"

"I should advise that you visit him," said Mr. Donlin. "Your eyesight appears defective."

"Possibly you are right," agreed Mr. Rudderham, "I cannot see you for the rest of the game."

Which is the Brooklyn equivalent for a benching.

The Yankees and Philadelphia Athletics broke even in the first local double-header of the season yesterday at the American League Park. The home nine won the first game by a fourth inning rally by the score of 6 to 5, and the Quakers captured the second, 1 to 0, due to the excellent pitching of Schlitzer, who won a game from the Yankees during the last visit of the Athletics to this city.

The first part of the entertainment was delightful to the big crowd. It was an enthusiastic throng, and every good play received its measure of applause. Things looked very blue for the locals until the break came. Then, not to seem inhospitable, the hosts permitted their guests to apply a coat of whitewash. In spite of the sextette of errors the teams divided between them in the initial encounter, the two battles were thrillers and well filled with startling fielding feats, to which were added in the second game at least desperate efforts by the locals to avert defeat and grand defensive work behind wonderful pitching.

In the first game the rivals battled for three innings, with the Athletics holding a commanding lead, then a gift, a little luck, and four hits boosted the Yankees' tally card and, as it developed, settled the fate of the game. With the score tied, Niles sent up a high foul. Both Schreck and J. Collins went after it. The ball dropped into the catcher's mit just as Collins rushed in. The impact upset all plans, and the ball dropped to the ground. Schreck glared at the offending third baseman and returned to his post behind the rubber. Then to show his appreciation of the unexpected kindness Niles smashed out a long single, sending in a brace of runs. The Athletics made a stab to snatch the game back again in the eighth, but only succeeded in getting one out of the two runs necessary to tie the score.

After the second inning of the first game young Walter Manning assumed his most respectable baseball behavior, although his early work was exceedingly raw and unsatisfactory, yet compared with that of Rube Vickers it was above par. The latter attempted to emulate the other Rube that Manager Mack carried on his payroll for four years—Waddell—in that he announced before the game that he would pitch both games if he won the first. Needless to say, Mr. Vickers did not pitch the second game.

That work was performed by a German recruit named Schlitzer, who pitched in an irreproachable manner. He twirled great guns, holding the Yankees to three scattered hits. It was one of the best twirling exhibitions of the season, and at that he did not have a whole lot on young Lake, who allowed his opponents but four hits; but Ball carried off stellar honors. The Yankees' shortstop made three hits during the two games, but his fielding was phenomenal. Nothing was too difficult for the fielding monster to gobble up, and in addition he pulled off a couple of star catches. Nichols, who fills the same position on the Athletic team, ran Ball a close second. The scores:

RESTIGOUCHE SETS A WORLD'S RECORD

J. R. Keene's Commando Gelding Runs Seven and a Half Furlongs in 1:31 1-5.

FOUR CHOICES SUCCESSFUL

Aimee C. and Edward, the Beaten Favorites, Both Finish Third in Belmont Park Races.

In the easiest victory earned at the Belmont Park race course yesterday Restigouche galloped in first for the fastest race at seven and a half furlongs ever recorded. The new mark, accepted as a world's record, was made in the contest for the New Rochelle Handicap, the stake feature of the programme, the winner being timed in 1:31 1-5, or four-fifths of a second faster than the old record, held jointly by three horses—Dainty at Oakland, Cal., in 1904; Welbourne at Belmont Park in 1906, and Cadichon at Seattle, Washington, last year. Restigouche's race was won in such style that the performance caused no comment beyond that over the satisfactory fact that the popular favorite had been successful in a tame contest against a moderate field, until the time was announced. The record making was much talked of afterward in view of the fact that Restigouche is the only horse that James R. Keene possibly can send for the Belmont Stakes to-day as substitute for the great Colin, whose breakdown was reported Thursday.

Like Colin, Restigouche is a son of the sensationally successful young stallion Commando, now dead, and though Restigouche hardly is to be mentioned in the same breath with Colin, the gelding has shown flashes of speed and run and won races in high-class company.

Restigouche had up the top weight under the scale in the race for the New Rochelle yesterday, and started as an even money favorite in a field of five horses, with Notter riding him. He took his 106 pounds to the front at the start and never was headed in the race, winning so easily that it seemed a certainty that had he gone on he could have run a mile better than the 1:37 2-5 that constitutes the American race record.

The distinguishing feature of the racing aside from Restigouche's fast race was that popular favorites fared much better than has been the average for the Spring, post choices winning in sequence in the last four races. The summaries:

MISS BISHOP IS CHAMPION.

Retains Woman's Local Golf Title by Defeating Mrs. Callan.

Miss Georgianna Bishop of the Brooklawn Club, Bridgeport, Conn., retains the metropolitan golf championship title for another year. In the final round of the local championship tournament played yesterday on the links of the Essex County Country Club at Orange, N. J., Miss Bishop defeated Mrs. L. W. Callan of the Englewood Club by 6 up and 5 to play. This is the second consecutive year that Miss Bishop has won the metropolitan woman's title, and in 1904 she was the National champion. Miss Bishop's victory had been anticipated since her defeat on the previous day of Miss Julia R. Mix, the Englewood golfer, who was runner-up last year. Miss Mix gave Miss Bishop the hardest game that the champion has had during the week's play, the game ending on the seventeenth green, 2 up and 1 to play in favor of Miss Bishop.

The second cup was won by Mrs. J. B. Kinney of the Richmond County Golf Club. She beat Mrs. A. D. Aldridge of Dyker Meadow by 3 up and 2 to play. The winner of the third cup was Miss Page Schwarzwalder of Baltusrol, who defeated Mrs. J. Crowell of the Essex County Club by 2 up and 1 to play. The final rounds in the tournament, which has been in progress since Tuesday, were witnessed by a large gallery, most of the officers of the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association being present to congratulate the victors.

Lassen Wins British Title.

SANDWICH, May 29.—The British amateur golf championship contest, which began here four days ago, came to an end this afternoon with the victory of E. A. Lassen over H. F. Taylor by 7 up and 6 to play. Neither of the men, who entered the final lists, is well known outside of the local clubs. Mr. Lassen is a young Yorkshire merchant. The tournament has been notable for the defeat early in the play of all the champions and ex-champions who contested.

BULLDOG SHOW AWARDS.

Richard Croker, Jr.'s, Entries Capture Many Trophies—Other Winners.

Richard Croker, Jr's., dogs won many of the special prizes at the second day's judging of the Spring show of the Bulldog Club of America at the McCreery building, 112 West Forty-second Street. Mr. Croker captured the St. Regis Cup, value $500, and the Glenwood Queen Cup with Milanshoo; the Overleigh Cup and a silver medal with Broadway, and with the pair he annexed the Deal Kennel Trophy for the best pair owned and bred by the exhibitor, a resident of the United States; a silver medal for the best dog and bitch bred in this country, and the Puppy Bowl with Brunswick.

Gotham Kennels also made an excellent showing for the specials, winning the Grand Trophy, the Porter Cup, the Clifton Kennels Cup, the Bulldog Club of America Cup and bronze medal with champion Heywood Beauty, champion Gotham Odin, Gotham Trust and Gotham Belle Victoria. Firenze Kennels was the only other exhibitor to figure prominently in the special awards.

The show, which closed last night, was the most successful ever held by the club, and it is probable that the Fall exhibition will also extend over two days.

C. C. N. Y. Faculty Team Wins.

The entire Student Body of the College of the City of New York witnessed the annual baseball game between the Seniors and the Faculty on Jasper Oval yesterday afternoon. This contest is the favorite event of the year and the only opportunity the undergraduates have to jeer and guy the august members of the Faculty. However, this year the Faculty squad had practiced steadily for a month and was in such good shape that they defeated the men who are to graduate this month rather easily by the score of 13 to 7.

St. Lawrence Wins Dual Meet.

CANTON, N. Y., May 29.—St. Lawrence University won the dual track meet with the University of Vermont here to-day by the score of 59 to 58.

Coyle Will Lead C. C. N. Y. Track Team

NOTES OF THE TURF.

R. F. Carman, because of dissatisfaction with the riding of his lightweight jockey G. Burns, has suspended the boy from riding for his own stable and will not permit Burns to accept mounts from other employers. No term for the suspension has been stated by the employer.

The three-year-old Uncle, for which S. C. Hildreth paid J. E. Madden $30,000 last Summer, is slightly lame as the result of his getting away from an exercise boy in a recent trial. The colt was reported then as having done a very fast trial, when, in fact, he was running away. Because of the mishap, Uncle was not named to start for the $25,000 Belmont Stakes to-day, the colt's first important engagement of the season.

Harry Payne Whitney has reported to The Jockey Club the death of the great race and brood mare Endurance by Right, 9 years old, by Inspector B.-Early Morn. Endurance by Right is the dam of the stake-winning filly Stamina, and of one of the most promising two-year-olds in the Whitney Stable. Endurance by Right was bought by the late William C. Whitney from J. W. Schorr for a price said to have been $30,000, and promptly afterward beat Heno in a sensational match race.

COLLEGIANS BREAK ATHLETIC RECORDS

Shaw of Dartmouth Equals World's Mark of 0:15 1-5 in 120-Yard Hurdle Race.

WORK OF POLE VAULTERS

Four Men Exceed the Intercollegiate Record of 11 Feet 11¾ Inches Held by Dray—Finals To-day.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., May 29.—One world's record was equaled and two intercollegiate records were broken in the preliminary trials of the annual intercollegiate championships which were held this afternoon on Franklin Field. With the pick of the college athletes of the East participating, to-day's events were of a high order, and to-morrow's finals in the blue ribbon event of the college athletic year promises record performances.

So keen was the competition for qualification in the finals that the stars were pushed almost to their limit to keep the newer men from beating them out. Undoubtedly the best performance of the day was the equaling of the world's records of 15 1-5 seconds in the 120-yard hurdle race by A. B. Shaw of Dartmouth. His feat of duplicating the figures made several years ago by the marvellous Kraenzlein was received with much enthusiasm. In equaling these figures he broke Kraenzlein's intercollegiate record of 15 2-5 seconds.

With the preliminaries out of the way and the semi-finals yet to be run, experts figure that the intercollegiate championship lies between Pennsylvania and Cornell, with Yale and Michigan close up. Michigan and Yale did not come up to the expectations of those who follow the sport, some of the smaller colleges beating their entries out in several events. Pennsylvania practically did all that was expected of her men, and Cornell probably did a little better than was anticipated.

The preliminaries in eleven of the thirteen events were disposed of to-day, there being no preliminary heats in the one and two mile events which will be run to-morrow. The number of men each college will have to-morrow in the eleven events for which preliminaries were held to-day, is as follows:

100 Yards.—Pennsylvania, Yale, and Harvard, each two; Princeton and Dartmouth, each one.
220 Yards.—Pennsylvania, Yale, and Dartmouth, each two; Harvard and Princeton, each one.
440 Yards.—Harvard, two; Pennsylvania, Cornell, Princeton, and Swarthmore, each one.
880 Yards.—Pennsylvania, three; Cornell, Yale, Harvard, Michigan, Princeton, Amherst, and Columbia, each one.
120 Hurdles.—Yale, three; Cornell, two; Harvard, Michigan, and Dartmouth, each one.
220 Hurdles.—Yale, three; Cornell, two; Pennsylvania, Harvard, and Dartmouth, each one.
High Jump.—Harvard, three; Pennsylvania and Dartmouth, each one.
Pole Vault.—Yale, four; Cornell, one.
Broad Jump.—Princeton, two; Cornell, Michigan, and Dartmouth, each one.
Hammer Throw.—Cornell, three; Pennsylvania and Syracuse, each one.
Shot-Put.—Harvard, three; Yale and Swarthmore, each one.

Shaw of Dartmouth and Cartmell of Pennsylvania are each expected to win ten points for their respective colleges to-morrow, and from the work of both men to-day it seems probable that they will succeed. Shaw's running in the high hurdles, in which he equaled the record, was clean and strong. He did not touch a hurdle in his flight. After his time was announced the track was officially measured, and the distance was found to be correct.

Another feature of the day was the remarkable work of the pole vaulters. No less than four men—Dray, Nelson, and Gilbert, all of Yale, and Cook of Cornell—breaking the intercollegiate record of 11 feet 11¾ inches, held by Dray. The world's record is 12 feet 6½ inches, also held by Dray. The battle to-morrow in the pole vault appears to lie between Dray of Yale and Cook of Cornell.

In the third heat of the half-mile run Riley of Harvard was interfered with and finished fourth. He will be permitted to run to-morrow. Summary of the trials:

Clinton Defeats Morris.

Yesterday afternoon at Macomb's Dam Park the track team of De Witt Clinton High School defeated that of Morris High by the score of 70 to 55. Harry T. Morrell, Captain of the Clinton track team, won the mile and 440-yard runs. He did the mile in 4:50. A. J. De Castro won the 100 and 220 yard dashes in good time, doing the 100-yard dash in 0:10 4-5 and the 220-yard dash in 0:24 flat. Rosenberg of Morris took the high jump with the jump of 5 feet 6 inches.

Where the Automakers Stand.

There has been considerable speculation since the drawing of the lines of battle by the American Automobile Association and the Automobile Club of America as to where the American manufacturers would stand in the fight between the two bodies. Although bound by agreement to support the American Automobile Association, many have held that the presence of foreign cars in the Automobile Club of America events would induce defections from the American Automobile Association ranks, agreements to the contrary notwithstanding.

The presence of President Thomas Henderson of the National Association of Automobile Manufacturers at the Racing Board meeting bearing the proxy of President Benjamin Briscoe of the American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association gave color to the American Automobile Association assertion that the manufacturers would stand by it. It is understood an official statement of their attitude will be made by President Henderson to-day.

Athlete Coates Is Suspended.

Harry A. Coates, who competed for the Pastime Athletic Club in a dual meet on May 24, has suspended himself, having competed for three clubs within three months, which is contrary to the rules. He is also not registered in the Metropolitan Association, having been transferred to the New England Association at his own request.

THE MEANING OF THE DAY.

To-day, by National agreement, we remember the dead who gave their lives for the preservation of the Republic and its Constitution, its just laws for every man, the liberty it insures to all alike. Most of the people of this broad land believe that its Government is the wisest and best ever established by man, its institutions the safest. From time to time they may develop obvious defects which must be judiciously corrected; there is nothing perfect in the works of man. But the country since the beginning has been one providing the best chance to the honest, sensible human being to develop body, mind, and soul; a country worth dying for.

A small but vociferous number of our fellow-citizens, scattered in all parts of the country, seem bent on its destruction. They are trying to change it into a huge Socialistic community, in which the chances of individual development shall be restricted, and industry and talent hampered. They demand, insanely, the demolition of the Government, and the substitution for it of a vaguely constituted paternal machine which shall support the incompetent and lazy at the expense of the competent and industrious. They clamor for State insurance against unemployment, accident, and the diseases incidental to old age. They demand the abolition of private ownership in productive property.

If they could have their way the Republic would be destroyed and a tyrannical form of government, with an imperator or dictator at the head, eventually established. That is the lesson of history. Of course, they will not have their way, but they are doing much to unsettle the minds of the young, to stir up the discontented, to check progress. It is well to bear in mind, in to-day's ceremonies, what they are striving to accomplish.

The blood that was shed for the preservation of the Union would be shed in vain if independence and the right of every man to make his way in the world, so long as he respects his neighbor's rights, were denied under the Stars and Stripes. The heroes of the Union fought and died for the Republic as it is. The people who are crying out for the abolition of the Supreme Court, and of the President's veto power, and the other safeguards of the Nation, can have no sympathy with to-day's exercises, and no tender regrets for the sacrifices of our National heroes.

THE POLITICAL EMERGENCY BILL.

Mr. HEPBURN put his finger upon possibly the weakest point of the panic relief bill when he said that its operation would "seriously aggravate the conditions which the currency is presumed to be efficacious in relieving." How true this is appears from the fact that it would not be soothing to hear to-day that ten New York banks had combined to take out the notes. It is difficult to imagine that all the banks in the Clearing House would combine in action under a bill which has been so criticised by the President of the Clearing House. The result would be that there would be a division between the banks which combined and those which did not combine, and it would be inferred that there was some special reason why they acted when others did not. Perhaps they might scent danger further than the other banks, perhaps they might merely be weaker. It would be difficult to imagine a situation which would not be "aggravated" by such action short of the last flurry of a panic. In other words, the bill is rather a cause than a remedy of trouble.

Nevertheless Mr. HEPBURN is glad that the bill is so far on its way to the statute book, and it must be admitted that it is not necessarily and positively harmful. It may be merely negative in its action. Taking this best view of the situation, there are two things to be regretted. In the first place we are relying upon what is a poor reliance, being somewhat in the position of a man who should start to draw his "gun" and found he had left it at home or had not loaded it. Clearly his situation would be worse than if he had not relied upon it, but had made other preparations. And secondly the impetus toward currency reform which is almost the only good result of the panic is checked by this installment upon account, which is so likely to turn out payment in full. Abating nothing of the criticisms of the bill, it might be endurable if it did not propose further consideration of the subject by a Commission so committed to the methods against which the banking community has protested.

Taking the worst view of the matter, the position is not like either of those which confronted Presidents GRANT and CLEVELAND. President ROOSEVELT is not called upon to save the country from financial disorder. He is confronted with a political rather than a financial situation, and upon him falls the first brunt of convincing the country that a measure for which he is responsible is satisfactory. He must set the key for countless orators who will begin their campaign upon the defensive unless some sudden change can be worked. This is embarrassing, since among his 203 messages none of them has proposed anything like what he must now sign. Politicians can turn shorter corners than bankers. Phrases can deal with almost any political situation, but banking emergencies deal with realities. Nice customs may courtesy to great occasions, but statutes alter no principles. The bankers who have condemned this measure cannot now commend it.

A MYSTERY OF THE RECOUNT.

It is singular that the ballots rejected for irregularity in marking are almost altogether McClellan ballots. The queer marks are not proof of fraud, not even inferential evidence of fraud. They appear to be the result of ignorance or clumsiness. But why should ignorance and clumsiness have voted all one way?

Did Mr. HEARST really get only the votes of the enlightened, was his support wholly made up of gentlemen of high literary culture, wonted to the pencil and the pen from infancy? And did the illiterate and the sodden all cast McClellan ballots?

It is inexplicable. The ballot boxes have been carted and kicked about a good deal in these two and a half years. If any designing person had set out to make the contents of the boxes belie the tally sheets, a perfectly simple method, of course, would have suggested itself. An added mark within the circle on any ballot would give cause for its rejection. This would solve the mystery and explain why the Mayor has a monopoly of forbidden markings.

There is no ground that we know of other than that of possible opportunity for suspecting that the old ballots have been thus tampered with, but we should suppose that a microscopic scrutiny of the invalidated ballots would be made a part of the court procedure with a view to determining so far as possible whether the redundant and unauthorized markings are throughout holographic and contemporaneous.

THE OPPOSITION TO BRYAN.

Here is one of the unsoundest of Col. HENRY WATTERSON's recent political arguments. He is talking about the opposition to Bryanism, with that dreadful bogy, the Money Power, in mind:

> Whom do they hate? Mr. BRYAN. Whom do they fear? Mr. BRYAN. Else why are they so eager to defeat his nomination? If he be so weak and so easy to beat they ought to help him along toward that nomination.

Col. WATTERSON knows perfectly well that the Republican Party organs regard Mr. BRYAN's possible nomination cheerfully. They would like to feel sure of having no stronger man to beat, and have been hopefully predicting his nomination.

The opposition to BRYAN's nomination comes from men who have the welfare of the whole Nation at heart, rather than party triumph. They want a strong, sane opposition to the Republican Party. They want the Democratic Party to cleanse itself, hold up its head, and do its duty bravely. They know perfectly well there is no danger of BRYAN's election, and so does Col. WATTERSON.

OUR COSTLY GOVERNMENT.

The Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, in his official summary of the session in the matter of spending money, does not adequately explain the enormous growth in the cost of the Government. He points out that Federal expenditure in proportion to the growth in the wealth of the country remains fairly even, that is to say, that every $1,000 bears about as much Federal burden as it did a score of years ago, while the cost of other forms of government has increased largely. The appropriations for the present year reach the enormous total of $1,008,804,894, or, in round numbers, one billion of dollars. This is an advance over last year of $88,206,750, or nearly 10 per cent. This is the more impressive from the fact that at the opening of the session it was known that the revenues would fall off, and for the past three months it has been plain that there would be a very large deficit. This is a record of recklessness that is, we believe, entirely without precedent in our history. There has been nothing like it save during the civil war, with which, of course, there can be no reasonable comparison.

Mr. TAWNEY seeks to throw a considerable amount of responsibility for the extravagance of Congress upon the minority, whose dilatory tactics have necessitated rules which made "freedom of discussion and action" impracticable. The coolness of this plea is so amazing as almost to silence criticism. It amounts to this, that the minority have not aided the majority in restraining the folly or greed of the latter. That is the "baby act" with a vengeance. It becomes even a little more absurd when we reflect that the dilatory tactics of the minority would have ceased instantly had the majority at any moment consented to permit a vote in the House on the measures for which the minority demanded simply a hearing. If Mr. TAWNEY and his fellow-leaders on the Republican side had really desired the aid of the minority in curbing themselves, they could have had it at the low cost of doing their plain duty in matters of public interest.

We do not know how much part will be played in the approaching canvass by the extravagance of Congress. It will depend on what sort of candidate the opposition may put up against the candidate of the party in power. It is certain that the country is not in a condition or a temper to bear needless burdens patiently. There is no room for question that this session of Congress has tremendously and needlessly increased the burdens that must be borne, and for this the Republicans, and they alone, are to be held accountable.

ETHICS FOR LAWYERS.

The "canons of professional ethics" proposed to the American Bar Association, to be acted on at the annual meeting in August, seem to the lay mind almost complete counsels of perfection. If the oath to observe the principles laid down shall be universally exacted on admission to the bar, and shall be observed in spirit and in truth, the lawyers of the land will gradually assume a purity that will distinguish them from the rest of the community as decidedly as would the possession of wings. Every fault and every defect which critics more or less hasty or informed have laid at the door of the lawyers since lawyers existed are pretty well covered by the canons and by the proposed oath.

No one, however, will blame the distinguished committee that has been engaged in the preparation of the canons for urging upon the profession a high ideal. Every man of them is known as an eminent lawyer, and three at least as eminent Judges. The United States Supreme Court is represented by Justice BREWER and the Court of Appeals of our own State by ex-Chief Judge PARKER, while Judge JONES of Alabama has made his reputation in the United States Circuit Court, and the other members of the committee are of like quality and experience. What they urge on the profession they must think is practicable as well as desirable. It will be interesting to see what measures will be taken by the American Bar Association, if it adopts this code of ethics, as, substantially, we assume that it will, to enforce it. The adoption of the oath on admission to the bar could probably be obtained throughout the Union, if pressed in each State by the bar thereof. But the observance of the oath is another matter. It cannot, we think, be exacted solely by the ordinary machinery of civil government. It will depend in practice on the real opinion of the profession in each State, and that, it may be inferred, is the opinion of the members of the several Associations. In a way, the movement may be said to put the Associations themselves on trial. That they may stand it with entire success is the earnest wish of all their friends.

THE WRIGHT AIRSHIP.

A balloon is not a bird or an imitation of a bird, and ballooning is not flying. The aeroplane is an artificial bird, and as its progress through the air is a true flight, it is to this mechanism, rather than to silken bags borne up by gas, that inventive genius is most hopefully applied in the effort to make aviation practicable. Success appears to be attainable in proportion to the ability of the inventor to make his mechanical bird copy the wing movements of those birds like the hawk, the gull, and the eagle, whose gliding flight is most easily studied. Some explanation of the construction of the new aeroplane has been given to the press by Mr. ORVILLE E. WRIGHT, and in the columns of our neighbor The Herald we find an interesting description of the mechanical devices by which wing movements are so imitated as to maintain the equilibrium of the machine, thus providing a safeguard against the aviator's chief peril, upsetting. Experiment has proved that a capsized aeroplane is not safe and convenient for travel.

The WRIGHT brothers have succeeded in securing controllable flexibility of the wings of their aeroplane, that is, they have brought it nearer to the bird model. These wings stretch out on each side from a rigid central section of framework. The front edge of the wings is rigid. By an arrangement of wires passing over a pulley and wound about a drum or windlass, the rear edge or flap of the wings may be raised or lowered at the will of the operator. A slight turn of the drum lowers the rear portion of one wing and raises the other, precisely what a hawk would do in turning or in keeping his poise against a sudden air current. The moment the operator feels an air current that threatens his equilibrium he shapes the wings to counteract it and keep his even keel. The wings, indeed, may take the form of propeller blades. As this would tend to give the airship a rotary motion, a vertical rudder has been provided which keeps it to the course. Air currents can be made to supplement the gas engine propeller in giving speed to the ship.

To make the mechanical wing do, under the control of the operator, what the bird's wing does instinctively, is the essential step toward air navigation. It is a long step, and the WRIGHT brothers have taken it.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Teaching Park Proprieties. Mr. HORNADAY's announcement in the vigorous letter printed on this page yesterday, that hereafter the Zoological Park in the Bronx is to be protected from the brutal maltreatment to which it has been persistently subjected by a small part of its many visitors, will be heartily welcomed by the large majority of New Yorkers, and he can count with confidence on newspaper and other support in the stern measures by which he purposes the teaching of elementary good manners and the rudiments of common decency to the minority that are in so much need of such instruction.

There is nobody, probably, who, on entering a neatly kept park, is entirely lacking in appreciation, though it be only subconscious, of the beauty which lies in having and keeping the walks and lawns free from rubbish of every kind, but there are people not a few who either forget or do not know the duty of subordinating their own present convenience to the general interest. These are they whose course through a park is marked by a trail of peanut shells and fruit skins, and who, after lunching under a tree, walk coolly away, leaving the place littered with greasy newspapers, tin cans, and assorted swill. The same people, if unwatched, will pick the flowers and ravage the shrubbery of a park, from some vague notion, apparently, that public property belongs to anybody minded to take it.

Mr. HORNADAY denies to these slovens and thieves the poor excuse of ignorance, for he has noticed that most of them come from countries where offenses of this kind are promptly and rigorously punished, and, while he does not intend to diminish innocent pleasures or to deny any of the rights legitimately to be expected in a free country, he does intend to demonstrate the fact that there is a difference between liberty and license. So, though he will not, as they do in most foreign cities, ban the eating of luncheons in the Zoological Park, he will see to it that the people who thus refresh themselves clear up the débris of their meals and give his too few attendants and laborers a chance to attend to more important and productive work than that of common scavengers.

The parks, of course, are for the public, and for the public use, but it is to protect and increase that use that Mr. HORNADAY, in the exercise of his proper power, has decided that patience with despoilers and befoulers has ceased to be a virtue and that hereafter the rights of the majority shall be respected by the ill-mannered minority.

Must Keep Order in the Cars. For the most part the passengers in our public conveyances behave themselves about as well as the conditions of travel permit and a good-natured acceptance of anything that will pass for a necessary annoyance or inconvenience is the rule. Now and then, however, a noisy or irritable drunkard makes a nuisance of himself, and on rarer, but entirely too frequent, occasions a group of hoodlum boys or ruffianly men gain confidence enough from their numbers to become thoroughly, or even dangerously, offensive in rough play that always tends to degenerate into fights.

The guards and conductors seem to take no great interest in these outbreaks unless they actually disturb the running of the car or train, and they usually refrain from interference unless they are themselves the objects of assault. In either of those cases they are active enough, and usually efficient in putting an end to the disorder. When only the ears of the respectable passengers suffer, however, the guards seem to hear nothing, and fights that do not threaten murder seem to escape their attention.

A decision just rendered in the City Court by Justice FINELITE is likely to cause the companies to issue some new instructions to their men and to awaken them to an increased sense of responsibility for the preservation of order in the cars. A woman who had been hit in the eye and seriously hurt by a flying shoe in a scrimmage in a car on the elevated road secured a verdict for $300 against the Interborough. The company moved to have the verdict set aside on the surprising ground that it was the duty of every passenger to protect himself as against every other passenger, but the Justice took an entirely different view. Many passengers, he said, including women, the infirm, and children, require particular consideration at the hands of a common carrier, and he characterized it as "an offense against civiliztion and unjustifiable" for such a carrier to allow passengers to indulge in riotous acts and behavior that result in the injury of other passengers.

"Offense against civilization" is a rather vague phrase, and riot does not need to be carried to the point of physical injury to be unjustifiable, but the important point is that the verdict was not set aside, and one can at least hope that it will stand in the higher courts if appealed. In the great majority of cases the guards could maintain order if they interfered firmly at the very beginning of disorder, for the man in uniform and with right on his side has an enormous advantage over any except really desperate criminals, and the really desperate criminals are not at all likely to make trouble in street cars.

A Novelist at Rawhide. Mrs. GLYN's participation in the midnight amusements of a Nevada mining camp's "tenderloin" will not commend itself to all as the best possible way of "studying America," and even the fact—if it be a fact—that she won $1,000 at faro in Rawhide's most vivacious palace of chance will not save her from all criticism. Still, it must be remembered that this enterprising representative of the British matron is probably in need of literary material, and it is perhaps better that she should supply herself with it by observing the doings of miners than that she should again trust to her imagination for information as to the doings of Princesses.

Gambling is not nice, nor are even futile attempts at homicide very pinkly proper, but they are more wholesome than some other things, and therefore we, for our part, are not sorry that Mrs. GLYN took in the sights of Rawhide with great thoroughness. We have, however, a dim suspicion that what she saw was not quite the regular course of events. Miners are a genial and obliging lot, and they would take care that their eminent visitor lacked for neither excitement nor the opportunity to spend money.

MAYOR'S TRIBUTE TO CLINTON.

He Showed Sagacity and Patriotism in Paying Honor to a Great American.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The people of the City of New York will only begin to realize just what energy, sagacity, and patriotism Mayor McClellan displayed in arranging for a proper tribute to the memory of George Clinton, first Governor of New York, until they have read the proceedings at Kingston and the oration of former Governor David B. Hill on the subject, "Who Was George Clinton?"

Next to Thomas Jefferson, George Clinton was the strongest Democrat in the United States when the Constitution was adopted. It was through his efforts that New York refused to accept the Constitution, and only fell in line when nine of the thirteen other States had agreed to abide by its functions.

The matter was first brought to Mayor McClellan in a most informal and unofficial manner. But with the keen sense of a trained newspaper man he saw the opportunity for the city of which he is Chief Magistrate to pay a worthy testimonial to a man who had for twenty-one years served as Governor and for eight years as Vice President; who forfeited the opportunity to sign his name to the Declaration of Independence in order to return to his own State and protect it from the invasion of the enemy; who was a full rank Brigadier General in the Continental Army, and a Major General by virtue of his position as Governor of the State of New York.

The State of New York has honored his memory by issuing eight volumes of the letters received and written by him during the Revolutionary War. This correspondence brings out all the strong, rugged, and virtuous characteristics of the true American.

Many people in New York with that censoriousness popular and epidemic among the American people, have criticised the Mayor for selecting Thursday for the day of the ceremony as if the Mayor were responsible for the day that was chosen. As a matter of fact, Thursday was the one day on which New York could in any way pay homage to the memory of this great man, for these reasons:

The City of Kingston is to celebrate the 250th anniversary of its birth to-day, May 30. That city had planned to have the body arrive on the afternoon of May 29. Accordingly arrangements were made to begin the formal transfer at Washington on Wednesday, May 27. It was only when the newspapers printed this fact that Mayor McClellan learned just what was proposed to be done.

Thursday, May 28, therefore, was the one day left open for New York. The National Guard was eliminated as a factor in the parade for the reason that the guard has already been called out in New York on three occasions this year, many of the men were engaged in rifle practice, and on Saturday, May 30, Memorial Day, the entire division was to parade. The Mayor can exercise no authority over the National Guard, and cannot even call them out. But the commanding officer of every regiment was asked if it were possible to obtain a number of volunteers, and the result was, as reported, that only one regiment, the Twenty-second Engineers, offered to furnish five companies aggregating about 150 men.

Now as to the regular army. The Division of the Atlantic is preparing for the Summer manoeuvres at Pine Plains, and the troops that participated in the morning parade were under orders to start for Plattsburg that night.

Two very serious contingencies confronted Mayor McClellan in regard to the commercial interest of New York—Wall Street and suspension of the traffic at the most important business hour of the morning. It was by the Mayor's direct order to his committee that the procession should leave Pier A North River at 9:30 o'clock sharp; that it should pass through Pearl Street rather than Bridge, thus saving time in order not to interfere with the Curb brokers on Broad Street, and that the column should leave Wall Street and Broadway before the hour set for the assembling of the Stock Exchange brokers. The column got under way at Pier A precisely at 9:30, and precisely at 9:47 turned from Wall Street into Broadway.

Every contingency possible to reduce to a minimum inconvenience to the business interests of New York commensurate with the impressiveness of the ceremony was considered. In paying the highest respect to the memory of the dead the Mayor never overlooked the responsibilities he owed to the living.

Chamber of Commerce and the Flag.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On my way to my office this morning I noticed with satisfaction that our flag at half mast was displayed on several office buildings in honor of the memory of George Clinton, the first Governor of New York State, whose remains were in the city pending transportation to Kingston, the final resting place. This mark of respect and patriotism was only to be expected; but imagine my surprise and disappointment when I turned down Liberty Street from Broadway and discovered that there was no flag on the Chamber of Commerce Building.

What excuse has the custodian of that building to offer for such a negligent omission? It has always been supposed that the Chamber of Commerce was an organization composed of representative captains of industry, commerce, and finance, who advocated things progressive and patriotic. I feel sure this impression is correct, but such neglect of the proprieties as occurred to-day should not happen again, for it is offensive to a patriotic public.

The Auto Race from Coast to Coast.

From The Chicago Age.

THE NEW YORK TIMES, the promoter of the American end of the present New York to Paris contest, now proposes an across-the-continent-and-back stock car race. The idea received much initial encouragement at a meeting of makers, importers, and dealers, and some others high up in the sport and industry, held last Friday evening; in fact, the meeting resulted in the appointment of Jefferson De Mont Thompson, A. R. Pardington, and Robert Lee Morrell as a special committee to suggest rules for the contest. It is proposed to start the race on August 15 and run it to the Pacific Coast, returning by a different route, so that as many big cities and as much varied territory as possible may be covered. It is understood that THE NEW YORK TIMES proposes to enlist the co-operation of fifteen other newspapers in important cities en route to divide both the expenses and the work.

Vote with a Rubber Stamp.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Would not an improvement in the present ballot law, with regard to the marking of ballots, be accomplished by (1) making the circle larger or dispensing with it altogether, and (2) providing an ordinary rubber stamp instead of a pencil with which to make the mark? As pointed out in your editorial article to-day, stiffened or impaired muscles may easily have been responsible for much of the bad marking on the ballots now being inspected in the McClellan-Hearst recount proceedings. In addition to this, visual defects may very probably have caused many of the marks to lie wholly or partly outside the circle. For certain eyes it would be wholly impossible to determine accurately the relative positions of a given point on the paper and a pencil mark.

METHODISTS ELECT EDITORS.

General Conference Also Considers Constitution for Extension Board.

BALTIMORE, May 29.—The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church to-day continued discussion of a constitution for the Board of Church Extension and Home Missions, organized during the last quadrennium. Practically all of the morning session was devoted to the presentation of amendments to the report of the committee on the subject. Among the important features agreed to were the following:

The General Conference Committee on Home Missions and Church Extension was ordered to be composed of seventy-one members, who will include the entire Board of Bishops, a Corresponding Secretary and his assistants, President, Treasurer, and Recording Secretary of the Board of Managers, two representatives—one lay and one clerical—from each General Conference district, elected by this conference, and fifteen representatives elected by the Board of Managers, no more than five of whom shall be from any one annual conference.

One of the liveliest debates was over the proposition allowing the board to aid churches in downtown districts, in college communities, and in other crucial places for the Church, where edifices costing more than $10,000 would be called for. This was finally passed, and the report adopted as a whole with the changes noted.

Elections were held at the afternoon session for editors of the Methodist official publications and Secretaries of the various Church boards. The balloting resulted in the re-election of all the present incumbents except in the case of The Pittsburg Christian Advocate. Dr. J. J. Wallace of Barnesville, Ohio, succeeded the Rev. Dr. Smith, who has been elevated to the Episcopacy, in the editorial management of that paper. Secretaries were returned as follows:

Dr. Robert Forbes, Board of Home Missions and Church Extension; Dr. McB. Mason, (colored,) Freedman's Aid Society, and Dr. E. M. Randall, Epworth League, all re-elections. Dr. David G. Downey was chosen Secretary of the Board of Sunday Schools and Dr. Joseph B. Hingely Secretary of the Board of Conferences, both new bodies.

The conference refused to agree to an overture of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for a restatement of faith.

FOR "TEMPERANCE SABBATH."

Presbyterians Characterize Legalized Drinking as "a Covenant with Death."

PITTSBURG, Penn., May 29.—At the request of the Anti-Saloon League of America it has been decided by the United Presbyterian General Assembly, in session here, to send a delegation to the next National convention of the league. The report of the Committee on Temperance, presented by the Chairman, the Rev. Dr. J. T. McCrory of Pittsburg, contained recommendations to the effect that the Assembly return to the original day, the fourth Sunday of November, as "Temperance Sabbath."

Concerning the saloon question, legalized drinking was characterized as "a covenant with death, a link with hell."

Emphatic declarations were made that the Bible be taught in the public schools.

PRESBYTERIANS PICK DENVER.

City Offers $35,000 Bonus to Entertain General Assembly Next Year.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 29.—Denver was this morning selected as the city in which next year's general assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America is to be held.

The invitation of Denver was accompanied with a promise of a bonus of $35,000 to entertain the delegates and guests.

The Assembly decided that the removal of R. J. Campbell as pastor of a church in Glasgow, N. Y., was not legal, and his case was remanded for a new trial.

Ex-Secretary of State John W. Foster, Vice Moderator D. R. James of Brooklyn, and the Rev. Dr. Stuart Dodge of the Board of Home Missions were appointed a committee to confer with the authorities at Washington in regard to the alleged interference with the work of the American Bible and American Tract Societies at Ellis Island.

WHY THE ITALIAN COMES

And Why He Must Be "Americanized" —Dr. Caccini's Answer.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is hard to determine whether the letter signed "An American" in to-day's TIMES reveals an ironical attempt at sincerity or a sincere attempt to be ironical. But in either case the writer's prevailing idea is that Italians should stay at home and that some missionary work might be done in Italy to keep them there. It is hardly worth while to discuss with "An American" the natural laws governing movements of populations or the fact that labor is like any other commodity and depends on demand and supply.

Italians come here to better their condition. They come here in response to demand for their labor. As long as these demands are made they will continue to come, and no missionary work in the world can stop them. Admitting this fact, it is desirable that they should become American in thought and aspirations in the shortest time possible. This can only be done by having them learn about American life and institutions through a knowledge of the English language. The danger Italians run here through the demonstration of the "Black Hand," as pointed out by "An American," would therefore necessarily end, for of course no Americanized Italian would think of paying blackmail to a criminal countryman.

Now, as to this criminal countryman: His presence here is due to inadequate immigration laws rather than to a laxity in enforcing extradition laws. Possibly "An American" will be able to tell his Government how to keep the criminal Italian out; possibly, also, he may have some special ideas as to how the good Italian may be made a useful American citizen without a knowledge of the English language and without a knowledge of American institutions. At all events, I trust he will pardon me for taking him seriously.

A. CACCINI, M. D.

New York, May 28, 1908.

He Wants Work.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The writer needs a position, which he has failed to obtain in the ordinary way of advertising and applying at the different employment agencies.

He is 34 years of age, married, an expert stenographer and typewriter, being experienced in the mercantile, express, railroad, steamship, law, and patent law lines. He has taken testimony both in shorthand and direct to the machine. He is a good correspondent, and thoroughly familiar with office work.

He lost his position last December through no fault of his, since which time he has been unable to secure anything but temporary work, and very little of that.

He can furnish the best of references, both as to his ability and personal character.

He is not an applicant for charity, but under the circumstances will accept a position with a considerable reduction of salary, believing "half a loaf better than no bread."

DECORATION DAY.

The roll is called in vain;
The bugle's clarion cry
Goes echoing o'er the plain
Where countless heroes lie.

Deaf is the ear of death;
Unpierced the grassy grave;
The martial music's breath
Wastes on the ether's wave.

Unhearing, undismayed,
Our valiant soldiers sleep;
The clash of war is stayed
While child and widow weep.

Pile high the immortelle
And drape with stripe and star—
To-morrow's tale shall tell
Where other heroes are.

To-morow's bugle call
Shall ring across the sea,
And from a martyr's pall
Arise fresh victory.

LURANA W. SHELDON.

KINGSTON WELCOMES GOV. CLINTON'S BODY

Whole City Out to Great Funeral Flotilla of State's First Executive.

BURIAL SERVICES TO-DAY

Ex-Gov. Hill to Deliver the Oration—Interment in Church Where Clinton Worshipped as Governor.

Special to The New York Times.

KINGSTON, N. Y., May 29.—Convoyed by flotillas of United States torpedo-boat destroyers and submarines, the gunboat Wasp, training ship of the New York Naval Militia, conveyed the body of Gen. George Clinton, the first Governor of New York and fourth Vice President of the United States, to Kingston Point Park to-day. In addition to the Wasp and the torpedo and submarine craft, there were also in line the cruiser Scorpion and the submarine tender Hist.

It was after 4 o'clock in the afternoon when the Wasp, which headed the marine procession, was sighted, several miles below Kingston Point Park, where she was to anchor until to-morrow, when Clinton's body will be taken ashore for final burial in the yard of the old First Dutch Church of Kingston, one of the oldest churches of that denomination in the United States and the edifice in which Gov. Clinton worshipped when he lived in Kingston.

Preparations had been made in all the Hudson River cities and towns between New York and Kingston to do honor to the funeral flotilla as it passed those places, but a heavy fog that did not lift until the flotilla had passed West Point made this practically impossible. At Tarrytown, Nyack, Peekskill, Ossining, Haverstraw, Manitou, and other places crowds of townspeople and visitors had assembled on the shores to pay respect to the memory of the dead as the Wasp passed, but only a dim outline of the vessel and her convoy could be seen, so thick was the haze.

Early this morning the Wasp, which had on board Lieut. Gov. Chanler, Chaplain Hoes, U. S. N., representing the Clinton descendants; Adjt. Gen. Nelson H. Henry, Commander Fry of the Naval Militia, several members of Gov. Hughes's staff, and a number of representative Kingston men, started on the ninety-mile voyage to the first capital of the State. The Wasp was followed by the Scorpion, then the submarines and the Hist, and then the four torpedo-boat destroyers. The programme called for slow speed, and not more than eight knots an hour were made. Nevertheless, the funeral flotilla passed Poughkeepsie a little ahead of time.

As the vessels passed West Point, the Cadet Corps passed in review on the plains, and an artillery detachment fired the Vice Presidential salute of nineteen guns. Long before the scheduled hour of arrival at Kingston Park Point, that place was crowded with Kingston citizens, and when finally the Wasp was sighted it looked as though everybody in the historic little city was there to pay tribute to the memory of its most famous citizen. The schoolgirls of the city were there in a body, some dressed in red, others in blue, and the rest in white, and they made a fine and patriotic display, massed together on the ground floor of the big pavilion that fronts on the river.

Just before the Wasp arrived at her anchorage off Kingston Point, Samuel D. Coykendall, representing the citizens' committee in charge of the funeral arrangements, and Mayor Crane boarded the vessel and officially welcomed the commanders of the flotilla, Lieut. Gov. Chanler, the Clinton descendants, and others who were on board in an official capacity. As the Wasp came to anchor a salute of nineteen guns was fired by a detachment from the Second Field Artillery, N. G., N. Y., of the Bronx, which had been ordered here for that purpose.

At the burial in the old First Dutch Churchyard to-morrow afternoon, ex-Gov. David B. Hill will deliver the oration, the artillerymen from the Bronx will fire a final salute, and Chaplain Hoes, U. S. N., will pronounce the benediction.

The funeral procession will be the most notable ever seen in this place.

FOR A JEFFERSON MONUMENT.

Woman's Democratic Club Wants to Erect It Above the Park.

The Woman's Democratic Club, dressed up in its prettiest Summer frocks, celebrated President's Day at the Hotel Majestic, yesterday afternoon, entertained twenty-five Presidents of Women's Clubs, and talked about the Jefferson Monument it is going to erect. It has $200 already toward the monument, donations from Controller Metz and Mrs. James Hagen, a club member. The monument may be erected on Jefferson Boulevard, which the Democratic women hope to have named for the purpose. They are working for it now.

"We have sent a petition to the Board of Aldermen," said Mrs. John S. Crosby, President of the club, "asking them to change the name of Seventh Avenue above the park to Jefferson Boulevard, and there, near the park, would be a good place for the statue."

Mrs. Alice Fischer Harcourt, who was made an honorary member of the club yesterday, told the members that this was a propitious year to work for a Jefferson monument.

"I don't see how there can be any chance of their failure to nominate that good Jeffersonian Democrat, William Jennings Bryan, for President," she said.

Mrs. Harcourt is to begin her work for the monument by writing to W. Gordon McCabe, the "Tennyson of the South," to come and talk to the club about Jefferson. "I'll ask him to make a good donation for the monument, too," she added.

Controller Metz is the Treasurer of the Monument Committee, of which Mrs. Crosby is Chairman and Mrs. Cornelius Sullivan, Miss Margaret Fitzgerald, and Miss Florence Adams are members. Meetings will be held in the Controller's office.

BOYS WANT FARMWORK.

Gratifying Response from College and High School Scholars to Offer.

New York State farmers can get all the schoolboy and college student labor this Summer they want. Prof. E. W. Weaver of the Boys' High School, Brooklyn, Chairman of the committee which is bringing together the farmers who want to employ the boys and the boys who want to work, said yesterday that he had received 1,200 applications from students in colleges and other schools outside of the New York public school system, as well as hundreds of others from boys in the city high schools. Two hundred boys of the Boys' High School alone have asked to be sent to the country.

"There'll be boys a plenty," said Prof. Weaver. But he was not so sure about the farm positions. Applications from farmers who want help have not been coming in very fast.

"The territory in which the boys may work is limited," says Prof. Weaver. "It will not do to send them much further out than 100 miles, because the expense would be so great they could not save much. Many of them must earn enough in the Summer to clothe them while they are at school in the Winter."

TOO SPEEDY WITH CHAPIN TROUSSEAU

Customs Inspector Suspended for Interfering with Special Treasury Agents.

SUPERSEDED HIS INSPECTION

He Was Hurrying Through the Job Under Orders, It Is Said, and Protested—Trivial, Collector Declares.

The wedding gown of Miss Grace Chapin, with other articles of wearing apparel purchased abroad by Miss Chapin and her parents, Alfred Chapin, ex-Mayor of Brooklyn, and Mrs. Chapin, has caused Customs Inspector Michael F. Reynolds to come to grief. Reynolds has been suspended for the part he played in the entry of that wedding gown into New York; a part inoffensive enough, according to the Chapins, but sufficiently grave in the eyes of the Collector of the Port to warrant the punishment of Inspector Reynolds. The gown also is simple enough, although it was made in Paris.

Miss Chapin will wear the gown next Monday afternoon, when she will be married in Grace Church to William Beverly Rogers, a grandson of Hamilton Fish. The Chapins returned from Europe a week ago last Sunday on the French liner La Touraine. They had been automobiling through Italy and France and had made the trip from Rome to Paris in their touring car. In Paris they stopped ten days, long enough to purchase the embroidered tulle wedding gown for Miss Chapin, and some other pieces for her trousseau.

The trouble came on the return of the family to town. As a courtesy to the ex-Mayor and his family, Inspector Reynolds received orders from his superiors to "expedite" the examination of their baggage. Such an order is, of course, only issued in the case of a person who is well enough known to the customs officials to be deemed trustworthy in regard to his or her declaration of the value of the foreign-bought goods in the passenger's trunks. Reynolds naturally obeyed the expediting order to the letter, unaware that two special agents of the Treasury Department whom he did not know were watching him closely. He had nearly finished the expediting process, and Mr. Chapin was getting ready to order the trunks transported to his home, at 2 East Fifty-sixth Street, when the two special appraisers stepped up and held the trunks. Reynolds hastened to explain that he had received an "expediting" order, but the appraisers proceeded to open the trunks and begin an inspection of their own.

Mr. Chapin had given the value of the trousseau at less than $1,000, and declared it accordingly. Whether the Appraisers saw fit to raise the figure is not known. As to Reynolds reports differ as to how he acted during the examination by the two Appraisers. The Appraisers say that his actions hindered their work. At any rate, the Chapin case has gone on record as the first "expedition" case which has miscarried here in many years. The order, instead of accelerating the inspection of Mr. Chapin's baggage, caused a delay of several hours and a lot of inconvenience to the Chapin family.

Miss Chapin, however, sympathized with Reynolds, and said so. Nevertheless, the Inspector has been suspended for ten days by the Collector of the Port. Collector Fowler, when asked about the suspension yesterday, said that the case was trivial. It was Reynolds's first offense, but discipline demanded his suspension.

"The Inspector interfered with the work of other employes of this department when they stepped up to make an examination," declared the collector. "To use a popular expression, he was guilty of 'butting in.'"

The actual charge, however, on which the suspension was ordered was "negligence of duty."

Mrs. Chapin declined to be interviewed last night about the trousseau or the Customs Inspector's suspension. From other sources it was learned that one of Inspector Reynolds's offenses in the eyes of his superiors was the writing down for the Special Appraisers of suggested appraisements of his own.

NEW YORKERS AT HORSE SHOW

Vanderbilt's Lord Burleigh Wins Leg on Bellevue-Stratford Cup.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 29.—Delighted over the arrival of cooler weather, society at the Horse Show to-day enjoyed itself in thoroughly "comfy" fashion, came early, and stayed late. Of the younger women present at the show few received so much attention as did Mrs. Marion Dougherty Gobel, Mr. and Mrs. D. Webster Dougherty's daughter, whose suit for divorce from the bohemian she married so romantically in London, is now pending.

Society also took much pleasure in greeting Mrs. James Henry Smith, widow of the New York millionaire, who died in Japan. She has been traveling abroad with Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Drexel, and is the guest this week of Mrs. Louis C. Norris.

Another wealthy New Yorker, who for many years was a Philadelphian, and who really knows more people here than she does in the other city, was Mrs. Evans R. Dick, who, with the always strikingly gowned Miss Evelyn V. Howell, was entertained by Edward B. Smith.

Mrs. Frank Gould was again present with her hostess of the week, Mrs. George A. Huhn, and if, as reported, her husband, with whom, as everybody knows, she has had a disagreement, was present on Thursday, she said she did not know of it. She was not there herself, she being entertained elsewhere for the day.

The battle for the Bellevue-Stratford Challenge Cup, bringing Judge Moore, Reginald Vanderbilt, and Miss Emily Bedford together in a bitter struggle, was the feature of the afternoon session of the show. Judge Moore won the first leg on this valuable trophy last year with Forest King, and hoped to repeat with Pride o' Prides or Lady Seaton.

Mr. Vanderbilt depended on Lord Burleigh, once the star of the Harriman stables, while Miss Bedford counted on her famous Hildred. Cheers rang from the spectators when the Challenge Cup, worth $500, and one of the three biggest prizes of the show, was awarded to Mr. Vanderbilt's Lord Burleigh. Judge Moore's Pride o' Prides and Lady Seaton received the red and yellow, respectively.

This gives Mr. Vanderbilt a leg on the trophy, evening up with Judge Moore, who secured a similar hold last year with his chestnut gelding Forest King, who, it was announced this afternoon, had to be shot yesterday after having dislocated his shoulder in a fall at Beverly, Mass.

The principal blue ribbon winners were:

Ponies Under Saddle.—Defender, (formerly Majestic,) Elsinor Farm, Glen Cove, L. I.

Ponies Under Saddle, Not Exceeding 10.1 Hands.—Cardiff, Charles Halloway, Bayside, L. I.

Hackney Mare or Filly.—Lively Beeswing, William H. Moore, New York.

Hackneys or Half-Bred Hackneys.—Pride o' Prides, William H. Moore, New York.

Thoroughbred Hunter.—Flaxen, Miss Frances Fell, Fort Washington, Penn.

Horses in Harness, Dealers' Class.—Surprise and Sensation, George Watson, New York.

Three-Gaited Saddle Horse.—Miss Ann, Miss Emily H. Bedford, Green Farms, Conn.

Four-in-Hands.—Minerva, Debator, Councilman, and Diplomat, entries of William H. Moore, New York.

Hackneys, for Three of the Get of Registered Hackney Stallion.—Cedric, Arcadia, Mary Chilton, get of Prince Crompton, exhibited by Frederick Pabst, Milwaukee.

Horses in Harness, Tandem.—Pride o' Prides and Senator, William H. Moore, New York.

Tennis Championships Decided.

Frederick B. Alexander won the Long Island championship in the lawn tennis singles from Irving C. Wright yesterday, and with his partner in the holding of the National doubles, Harold H. Hackett, the doubles title on the courts of the Kings County Club, Brooklyn. Both were captured in hollow fashion and were so one-sided as to be but poor competitions. In the challenge match for the cup Alexander at every stage outclassed Wright and won at 6—4, 6—2, and 6—1. In the doubles Alexander and Hackett defeated Edwin P. Larned and C. Frederick Watson, Jr., 6—2, 6—2, and 6—2.

Three championships were decided on the lawn tennis courts of the West Side Club yesterday. Miss Louise Hammond won the women's singles, defeating Mrs. A. G. Miles, 6—2 and 6—3. Ross Burchard defeated William B. Cragin, Jr., for the men's singles, 13—11, 3—6, 6—3, 6—8, and 6—3. In the men's doubles Raymond D. Little and Edgar W. Leonard defeated Ross Burchard and Edwin P. Fisher, 7—5, 6—2, and 6—1. The victory of Burchard over Cragin in the singles is the longest in point of games in the history of the championship. As C. C. Kelley, champion of last year, has been compelled to give up tennis because of poor health, Burchard will take the cup and title in this event by default.

GO ABROAD TO REHEARSE.

Frohman Now Sends His Actors to London to Save Time.

Charles Frohman has hit upon a new plan for facilitating his early productions of plays to be produced in this city by casts including members of his organizations who are retained in London in the Summer. As the American season is practically at an end while the foreign one is still active, Mr. Frohman has decided to take a number of his American actors to London to rehearse there.

For instance, Joseph Coyne, who is appearing in London in "The Merry Widow," is to play in New York early in the Fall in Hubert Henry Davis's play, "The Mollusc," and it has already gone into rehearsal in London, Mr. Forrest Robinson and several other American actors having been called there to rehearse with Mr. Coyne. Miss Beatrice Forbes-Robertson, who last played here with Marie Bere in "The Morals of Marcus," is also to be a member of the cast.

Mr. Frohman contemplates sending Mr. Seymour Hicks and Miss Ellaline Terriss to America early in the new year to appear in an American comedy with an American supporting company.

A musical version of George Bernard Shaw's "Arms and the Man," which the late Richard Mansfield first acted, and which was subsequently used by Arnold Daly, is to be produced simultaneously in London, Vienna, and New York, the production rights here being held by B. C. Whitney, while George Edwardes has obtained the English rights.

NEW MERRY WIDOW HERE.

Fräulein Mizzi Miller, a "Merry Widow" new to America, will arrive from Europe on the French liner La Provence, due to-day. She has been playing the title rôle of the operetta in Vienna, where Mr. Savage witnessed her performance a year ago. She has now mastered the English language, thus completing the condition of a contract made with Mr. Savage, and will make her first American appearance as Sonia at the New Amsterdam Theatre some time in July.

It is now definitely announced that "The Merry Widow" will continue all Summer at the New Amsterdam. Though nothing has yet been finally decided, it is not unlikely that the production may be transferred to the New Amsterdam Roof for a week or two during the hottest weather.

STRIPS BOY IN SWAMP AND TIES HIM TO TREE

Lad of 10 Tortured by an Older One Because Mother Refused to Buy His Fish.

GNAWS THROUGH HIS BONDS

Found by His Father Wandering About Naked and Dazed—Police Looking for the Tormentor.

Charles Morgenthaler, 10 years of age, a Jamaica schoolboy, was stripped of his clothing in a swamp and tied to a tree yesterday by a boy three years older than himself. The Morgenthaler boy was discovered by his father, after hours of exposure and sunffering, wandering about in the swamp. He had gnawed away the rope that bound his wrists and managed to unfasten the chain with which his ankles were bound. He did not dare, however, to venture out of the swamp naked and return home. If the boy's father finds the boy who ill treated his son before the police arrest him, he says there will be trouble.

Mrs. Morgenthaler, who lives at 21 Siney Street, Jamaica, was asked to buy a weakfish by a boy who is but slightly known in the vicinity. He said he had been fishing and had caught the first weakfish taken this season from Jamaica Bay. She declined to buy the fish, and the boy left the house cursing.

About noon Charlie, who attends a parochial school, and who had been to church service, arrived home attired in his Sunday clothes. The boy who had the weakfish, whom Charlie knew slightly, returned and prevailed upon Charlie to go fishing and led him to a swamp near the Merrick Road, some distance from his home. There the boy dropped his friendly manner and ordered Charlie to take his clothes off. When Charlie refused, he says his companion knocked him down and stripped him. Then, Charlie says, the other boy beat him with a stick, tied his hands with a rope, and then fastened him to a tree with a dog chain.

Then, after beating him some more with a stick, the younger boy's tormentor picked up his victim's clothing and ran away.

When Charlie did not return to dinner, his father learned that he had been seen with the older boy going into the swamp and after a long search the father found Charlie wandering about naked and dazed, and wrapping the boy in his coat he took him home.

The boy's teeth chattered as he told the story, and he had been badly bitten by mosquitos. He could give no reason for his treatment by the other boy.

After taking his son home, Mr. Morgenthaler informed the police, who are looking for a boy named John Weaver, who lives in Cedar Manor, but is reported to be of a roving disposition. Some boys informed Mrs. Morgenthaler that they nad seen the Weaver boy in a lumber yard wearing Charlie's Sunday suit.

He was also the designer of a number of electrical machines and instruments, and his writings on electrical engineering have been published throughout the country in scientific journals.

He was born at Coventry, R. I., Nov. 17, 1835. He began his education at the Friends' School at Providence, R. I., and later attended the Providence Conference Seminary in East Greenwich, R. I. He was graduated from Yale and received the degree of Ph. B. in 1857.

In 1861 Prof. Anthony married Miss Eliza Mathilda Gervin. He was Principal of the school at Crompton, R. I., and at different times was connected with the Providence Conference Seminary, the Delaware Literary Institute of Franklin, N. Y.; Antioch College, Ohio; Iowa Agricultural College, and Cornell University. He had been with Cooper Institute since 1894.

Prof. Anthony was a member of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, the Franklin Institute of Philadelphia, and the American Social Science Association. He was coauthor with Prof. C. F. Brackett of the "Manual of Physics," and was the author of "Lecture Notes on Theory of Electrical Measurements." Prof. Anthony leaves a widow and one son, Charles C. Anthony.

Unaffected by Pittsburg Terminal Receivership—Banks Report a Heavy Loss in Surplus.

The approach of the two-day holiday served to diminish activity on the floor of the Stock Exchange yesterday, but the movement of prices was after some early uncertainty firm, and at the close advances of a point or more had been scored by the leading shares. The greater part of the strength of the market was due to rather general covering of short stock by speculators, who apparently did not care to go over the holiday with their commitments. In Northern Pacific a sharp rise occurred upon the spread of reports that the Directors who were scheduled to meet during the day would declare upon the stock the much talked about extra dividend. The declaration of the regular dividend later was followed by a loss of practically all of the earlier gain. The market divorced itself from the Gould situation almost completely, and even such recognized Gould stocks as Wabash, Missouri Pacific, and Denver & Rio Grande were unaffected by the persistent reports of an impending receivership for the Wabash-Pittsburg Terminal, reports which were verified just before the close of business by the appointment of a Pittsburg banker as receiver by the Federal Court in that city. A protective committee to look after the interests of holders of Wabash-Pittsburg Terminal bonds has already been formed, and under its auspices there will undoubtedly be worked out a plan which will permit more successful operation of this unquestionably valuable property. The earlier fears of Wall Street that the difficulties here might extend to other parts of the Gould system appear to be entirely groundless. On grain markets there were once again violent fluctuations in wheat and corn prices, but after declines of several cents a bushel in each of these commodities the closing figures were little changed from those of the previous night. It is now so generally understood that the movements in corn and wheat are controlled entirely by speculative operations that no attempt is made to find a connection between them and conditions in the fields. Among railroad earnings reported during the day the most favorable statement was that of the Atlantic Coast Line, which in the month of April after undergoing a loss of $177,000 in gross so reduced expenses as to bring about an crease of $41,000 in net.

On account of the legal holiday to-day the Clearing House made public yesterday its usual weekly statement of the position of its members. The figures have been somewhat complicated by the operations of one of the most important of the associated institutions, which a week ago declared a dividend of 100 per cent. on its capital, but on the face of the statement the banks lost above $15,000,000 in cash, and this with the other changes led to a decrease of $8,575,000 in surplus, which stands now at $47,910,000. This, however, is almost unprecedented for this season of the year, or, in fact, for any period. The Bank of France in its usual weekly return reported a gain of above $11,000,000 in gold holdings, and the cables of the day stated that interest rates had been lowered by the bank. This, together with the reduction in the discount rate of the Bank of England and the probability of similar steps at Berlin, should put an early end to the gold export movement.

More Time for Westinghouse Plan.

With the expiration on Monday of the time for subscription by stockholders to $6,000,000 of the new stock of the Westinghouse Electrical Manufacturing Company under the rehabilitation plan, there is little doubt that a further extension of time will be granted. Up to the present the stockholders have taken very close to 66 per cent. of the 120,000 shares, which is their share of the burden of furnishing new funds under the plan.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES

Approaching Holiday Serves to Restrict Trading in Curb Stocks.

NIPISSING THE FEATURE

Report of Favorable Developments at Company's Mines Carries Price to Highest Point of Year.

A holiday spirit pervaded the Curb market yesterday, and except for some activity in Nipissing the trading was of a desultory character. The advance in Nipissing carried its price up to the highest point of the year—7⅝—at which figures it sold on March 9 last. The rise was accompanied by reports of favorable developments at the company's mines. There were some weak features elsewhere in the list, notably Combination Traction, which made a new low record for the year. There were heavy dealings in Tidewater 6 per cent. notes, which fell off from 98⅜ to 97½, but recovered at the close to the higher figures. National Railways of Mexico 4s when issued sold at 87, and the 4½s at 94½@94¾.

Safety Switches on Pennsylvania.

Reports compiled by the Pennsylvania Railroad in response to a resolution of Congress calling upon the Inter-State Commerce Commission to investigate the use of facing point switches on the railways of the United States, shows that within the last four years the Pennsylvania has removed the possibility of accident from open switches on 1,078 miles of the Pennsylvania lines east of Pittsburg. GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

WHEAT.—The May deal in Chicago went out yesterday with a burst of strength, representing a 9c advance for the week. The rest of the market was affected but little. Chicago, however, showed a final rally that left the undertone about steady. Crop news was again conflicting. Export sales were 18 loads. Late English cables were ⅛d to ⅝d net lower, Berlin closed 1⅞c down, and Budapest 3½c lower. Cash wheat in New York closed as follows: No. 2 red, $1.02, nominal, elevator, and 99½c, free on board, afloat; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, $1.17½, and No. 2 hard Winter, $1.10⅝, free on board, afloat.

CORN.—The May delivery in Chicago yesterday sustained a 5-cent break early, but made a full recovery and then a final 2c break. Receipts at Chicago were liberal on Friday, but the estimate for Saturday was only 157 cars. Cash corn in New York closed as follows: No. 2 78c, elevator, and 75½c, free on board, afloat, both nominal.

THE COFFEE MARKET.

Coffee was quiet yesterday, with the close steady at unchanged prices. Sales were reported of 11,750 bags. Reports that the auction sales of Government coffee at Hamburg had been successful and an announcement that 160,000 bags of the Valorization coffee had been sold in New York failed to stimulate business. Spot coffee was steady; 6⅝c for Rio No. 7.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 29.—The one-dollar dividend declaration on North Butte late yesterday afternoon was larger than generally expected, not more than 50 cents being anticipated, and commission houses appeared with buying orders in this stock at the opening, the initial price being 1½ points above yesterday's close, the stock later selling as high as 64¾. The declaration of the usual one-dollar dividend on Copper Range was without effect on that stock, as this amount was generally anticipated. The general list is fractionally higher as a result of the day's trading.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Holiday Feeling Prevailed.

It was to be expected that there would be a comparatively light attendance on the floor of the Exchange yesterday, and this expectation was verified. Furthermore, the brokers who usually attend to office business transferred some of their responsibilities either to their juniors or to their head employes and lengthened their holidays by another day. The same is true of the traders, or as many of them as make their headquarters in customers' rooms. There was not, in consequence, anything particularly exciting in any of the departments, and whatever there was of activity in the market was due to the work of a limited number both of brokers and traders. Although there has been more or less nervousness during the week, there was nothing apparent in the sentiment evident at the close to suggest the theory that there was any fear of possible developments between that and the opening next Monday. There is a feeling that all the railroads due to go into the friendly hands of receivers have not yet been enumerated, and even the announcement concerning the Wabash-Pittsburg Terminal Company did not complete the list, but traders feel that they know where the weak ones are to be found.

⁂

Disregarding Bank Figures.

Ordinarily, such a bank statement as that published after the close yesterday would cause much comment and possibly disturb the equanimity of those who are carrying stocks over the holiday. But the situation is such that a loss of $8,000,000 in reserve is not expected to have any material influence one way or the other, and the bank figures were simply noted as interesting and nothing more. The stock prices recorded after the bank figures came out showed a strenuous disregard for the loss in cash and decreased reserve. Neither banker, broker, nor trader feels that monetary conditions for the next month, two months, or three months will afford anything worthy of consideration as a bearish factor, and a steady decrease in the surplus reserve would not bring the total surplus to a point where any one need worry about it. The brokers are in a very comfortable position, and undoubtedly those who are—if they are—manipulating the market know what they are about.

⁂

Northern Pacific Dividend.

Only those disposed to accept as accurate the wildest tips and suggestions of irresponsible rumor mongers were surprised when the Northern Pacific regular dividend was declared. Those who have any claim to conservatism disregarded the fancy stories which have found currency from time to time. Railroad men never placed particular credence in these stories, so far as they applied to any immediate development. Some of them went far enough to indicate that the financial situation in Northern Pacific was such that there was no reason to suppose that some substantial benefit might not accrue to the stockholders some time in the future. One railroad man put his opinion into these words yesterday: "Very often railroad men who are entirely familiar with both the financial and operating departments are surprised when certain alleged news comes to their ears. Sometimes it is adverse and so ridiculously far from the truth that it incites annoyance, while at other times it is so laudatory as to be laughable. So far as the Northern Pacific is concerned, it seems to me that they are quite comfortable, but I never could find out that they had a surplus which pressed so heavily on them that they wanted to give it away. This is not a good time, either, for extra dividends or bonuses."

⁂

Status of Junior Securities.

No one was surprised at the announcement with regard to the Wabash-Pittsburg Terminal. It has been a matter of common knowledge for several days. It is unfortunate in some respects that such action had to be taken, inasmuch as there must be many holders of these securities who can ill-afford to be participants in the situation as it exists now. For a time after they were issued the bonds of the company were more or less active and apparently attractive, but subsequently, on receding prices, the market disappeared. There is one thing about the losses which may fall on such security holders that must not be disregarded as an adverse factor in the situation, and that is that it lessens the faith of investors in junior securities or in the securities of companies that are not absolutely and thoroughly established. Every investor who has been induced to buy junior securities and has lost money because of receiverships thereafter is practically eliminated as part of the buying power in the bond market for an indefinite period.

⁂

Testing Business Sentiment.

One of the bond houses had its men on the road form themselves into a general reporting brigade concerning business conditions as they found them throughout the country. They were to report what they learned from their bond customers and from business men with whom they came in contact and give their own opinion, not necessarily as experts, but from what they could see and from what they could feel as to the busines outlook. The result was a number of very interesting letters which, it might be said, reflected with surprising accuracy the real situation. Comparing and collating the various views, one member of the house in question found that there has been an improvement in business, which is not measured, perhaps, by the total of bank clearings or by any of the other usual indicia, but rather by subordinate betterments, if it may be so expressed, and most particularly by greater cheerfulness and optimism. He found, also, that this optimism was of necessity strong in the fact that it did not lack in conservatism nor in the taking into consideration of basic conditions and obvious facts.

CARNEGIE TRUST DIVIDEND.

Initial Payment on Company's Stock Made on 6 Per Cent. Basis.

Directors of the Carnegie Trust Company yesterday declared a semi-annual dividend of 3 per cent. upon the capital stock of the company, the payment calling for $45,000 upon the $1,500,000 of capital. This is an initial dividend according to the announcement, the stock having been placed on a 6 per cent. per annum dividend basis.

Ex-Secretary of the Treasury Leslie M. Shaw became President of the Trust Company about a year ago, but resigned the position early in the present year. The present President of the company is C. C. Dickson. Sales of the stock were made on Wednesday at 150.

PRODUCE EXCHANGE STOCKS.

The principal transaction reported yesterday in the stock department of the Produce Exchange, with opening, high, low, and last price, was as follows:

THE COTTON MARKET.

Light, Irregular Trade—Closes 6 Points Down to 9 Points Up.

Cotton was quiet yesterday, with fluctuations irregular. The close was at a decline of 6 points to an advance of 9 points. Sales were estimated at only 175,000 bales.

The market opened steady at a decline of 11 points to an advance of 4 points, the near months being lower in response to weak cables and the new crop relatively steady. It was reported late in the day that a considerable lot of cotton had been sold from the New York stock, and supplies here available for delivery on contract during June would be very small. Advices say that the break in the levee at Pine Bluff has led to the overflowing of 15,000 acres.

The weekly total crop movement figures of the New York Cotton Exchange follow: Port receipts, 7,951,957 bales, against 9,676,568 last year; overland to mills and Canada, 692,971 bales, against 1,139,269 last year; Southern mill takings, 1,905,000 bales, against 2,041,000 last year; stock at interior towns in excess of Sept. 1, 184,624 bales, against 162,639 last year; brought into sight thus far for season, 10,734,552 bales, against 13,019,476 last year.

The total crop movement is for 272 days, against 273 days last season.

The range of contract prices was as follows:

The local market for spot cotton was quiet and unchanged at 11.40c for middling upland and 11.65c for middling Gulf. Sales, 100 bales.

Southern spot markets were telegraphed as follows: Savannah quiet, ⅛c lower, at 11⅛c; sales, 338 bales. Norfolk firm, ⅛c higher, at 11⅝c; sales, 226 bales. Augusta firm, unchanged at 11⅝c; sales, 549 bales. Memphis steady, unchanged at 11⅝c; sales, 1,200 bales. Houston steady, unchanged at 11⅝c; sales, 209 bales. CONDITION OF TRADE.

Discussing general trade conditions, Dun's Review says in its issue to-day:

Industrial conditions continue to improve and arrangements have been made for the resumption of many plants next week, while retail trade is increased by seasonable weather. Floods have caused damage, but crop reports are unusually encouraging, and high prices for grain are due to light supplies of last year's yield, with the aid of vigorous manipulation. Mercantile collections are more prompt and money rates are low, despite exports of $40,000,000 in gold and Treasury withdrawals of $45,000,000. Traffic conditions are slightly better, but railroad gross earnings for May thus far were 21.7 per cent. less than in the same month last year.

After foundry iron had advanced to $11.50, Birmingham, there was a further stiffening in tone, and deliveries during the last quarter were only undertaken at $12. Improvement in demand was sufficient to cause resumption at more idle plants, output on June 1 promising a substantial increase over the rate on May 1.

Bradstreet's says:

Weather, crop, and trade reports are irregular. There are some rather less reassuring advices from some sections as to leading crops, due mainly to excessive rainfall in wide areas; bad roads are necessary result of this, and trade in affected sections naturally has suffered.

THE EUROPEAN MARKETS.

Happenings of a Day in London, Paris, and Berlin.

LONDON, May 29.—Money was quiet on the market to-day and discounts were easy. Trading on the Stock Exchange was heavy. The settlement has been satisfactorily concluded. Business for new account broadened slightly, and cheap money is being invested more freely in consols and good yielding securities.

Paris supported foreigners and Kaffirs, while copper shares improved with the metal. American securities, although steady, were undecided in the forenoon, and business was narrow at a fraction over parity. Later a hardening occurred, and, with New York buying its favorites, the market finished steady near the best for the day. Grand Trunks rallied sharply after their weakness on the April statement.

Bar silver steady at 24 7-16d per ounce. Money, 1@1¼ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 1⅝@1¾ per cent.; for three months' bills, 1⅝@1¾ per cent.

PARIS, May 29.—Trading on the Bourse to-day was firm, with the exception of rentes. Three per cent. rentes, 95f 90c for the account.

Exchange on London, 25f 13c for checks.

The weekly statement of the Bank of France shows the following changes:

Notes in circulation increased 3,200,000f, Treasury deposits increased 200,000f, general deposits increased 210,425,000f, gold in hand increased 66,800,000f, silver in hand increased 1,775,000f, bills discounted increased 108,550,000f, advances decreased 6,700,000f.

The Bank has lowered its discount rate on loans from 4 to 3½ per cent.

BERLIN, May 29.—Trading on the Boerse to-day was sluggish. Government securities were firm on London advices.

The Middle States had 80, New England 22, Southern 61, Western 55, Northwestern 13, Far West 32, and Pacific Canada had 31, against 39 for the preceding week. 'VALORIZATION' COFFEE SALE.

Good Prices Here and in Germany Under Brazil States' Plan.

Following the news from Hamburg yesterday of the sale at auction there of 50,000 bags of coffee for the account of the Sao Paulo Province of Brazil under the "valorization" plan inaugurated over a year ago, Crossman & Sielken, the New York participants in the Brazilian Government's plan, notified the Coffee Exchange yesterday that they had sold 160,000 bags of "valorization" coffee here.

The "valorization" plan provided for the purchase by the Governments of the principal Brazilian coffee-growing States of all coffee offered at a minimum price. A large part of the coffee thus bought was warehoused by the Government here and abroad, and money obtained with the coffee as security, and it is this coffee which is now coming into the market. The New York firm made the statement that no further offerings would be made by it until there was urgent demand from the trade. The firm explained that the sales were made at 8½ cents, "New York terms," for shipment "as they run."

The sales in Germany and Hamburg totaled 60,000 bags, which brings the full amount of "valorization" coffee sold here and in Europe to 220,000 bags. The prices fetched in Germany were equal to about 10.15 cents, which is considered a high figure, comparing with 9.77 cents, which was to have been the upset price.

The object of the sales was to test the market, and trade authorities agreed yesterday that the effect of the high prices fetched has been to stimulate the market. July coffee sold here on Thursday at 90 points above the prevailing price on that date in 1907, and the prices brought by the sales of valorization coffee are a further advance of about 25 points.

BANK CLEARINGS INCREASE.

Higher This Week Throughout Country for the First Time Since October.

For the first time since last October the clearings of all banks throughout the United States this week show an increase, the figure of $2,245,728,412, compiled by Dun's Review, representing a gain of 15 per cent. The total of the exchanges is affected somewhat by the fact that they cover six days this year as compared with five days a year ago, when Decoration Day fell within the period under review.

The gain, however, is an absolute one and represents, in comparison with a five-day period in 1906, an increase of 5.4 per cent., when five days were also covered.

There is evidence of a slightly better condition as noted last week, not only at New York City, where greater activity in the stock market has increased payments through the banks, but at the other points outside New York. Average daily exchanges for May at these leading cities is $392,545,000, against $427,357,000 a year ago, and $467,634,000 in 1906, a better comparison than at any time in the last six months. Average daily bank exchanges for the year to date are compared below for three years:

	1908.	1907.	1906.
May	$392,545,000	$427,357,000	$467,634,000
April	348,037,000	440,106,000	474,884,000
1st quarter	355,645,000	512,976,000	515,398,000

PABLO MACEDO, ESQ., CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE NATIONAL RAILWAYS OF MEXICO, IN A LETTER DATED MAY 6TH, 1908, ADDRESSED TO THE UNDERSIGNED, WRITES, IN PART, AS FOLLOWS:

"The Mexican Government, which through ownership of Stock already practically controls the National Railroad Company of Mexico, has caused a plan to be prepared for the Readjustment and Union of the Mexican Central Railway Company, Limited, and the National Railroad Company of Mexico, through the creation of a new Company, entitled Ferrocarriles Nacionales de Mexico (NATIONAL RAILWAYS OF MEXICO).

"The Mexican Government will hold a controlling interest in the stock of this company.

"These bonds form part of a total authorized issue of $225,000,000 (which may be increased by $6,000,000 additional Bonds, ranking pari passu with the other Bonds of the series, to retire £1,200,000 4½ per cent. Prior Lien Bonds of the Mexican International Railroad Company or other Bonds which may have been issued to retire them), to be secured under a mortgage as mentioned below. About $103,000,000 of this amount (whereof not exceeding $64,000,000 are to be issued forthwith) is issuable for the purpose of retiring Bonds and Notes of the Mexican Central Railway Company, Limited, and the National Railroad Company of Mexico. The remainder can only be used for defined purposes as follows:

"About $48,000,000 can only be applied for the construction or acquisition of additional railroad lines, and the acquisition of Stocks and Bonds of other Corporations owning lines of railroad, etc., and about $47,500,000 after 1st January, 1910, for improvements and equipment at a rate not exceeding $2,500,000 Bonds per annum cumulative; about $26,500,000 are available for the purposes of the Plan and for improvements and equipment required in the near future.

"The Prior Lien 4½ per cent. Sinking Fund Redeemable Gold Bonds of the Company are to mature on 1st July, 1957, and are to be secured under a Mortgage and Deed of Trust to the Central Trust Company of New York, as Trustee, by the deposit and pledge by way of first charge of all securities embraced in the Plan of Readjustment as finally carried out, and on the acquisition of the property of the National Railroad Company of Mexico and for the Mexican Central Railway Company, Limited, by direct charge thereon.

"The Bonds are to be further secured by the mortgage and pledge of all property acquired by the proceeds of any of the Prior Lien Bonds, and by the mortgage and pledge, with priority over the General Mortgage, of all property at any time embraced in the General Mortgage, or acquired by the use of any of the Guaranteed General Mortgage 4 per cent. Gold Bonds of the Company.

"THE PRIOR LIEN 4½ PER CENT. BONDS WILL, THEREFORE, RANK BEFORE THE $160,000,000 GUARANTEED GENERAL MORTGAGE 4 PER CENT. SINKING FUND REDEEMABLE GOLD BONDS, MATURING 1ST OCTOBER, 1977, PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST AND SINKING FUND INSTALMENTS OF WHICH ARE TO BE UNCONDITIONALLY GUARANTEED BY THE MEXICAN GOVERNMENT (which amount may be increased for refunding purposes, as provided in the General Mortgage).

"Provision is to be made in the Prior Lien mortgage for the creation by the Company of a Cumulative Sinking Fund (the first annual payment in respect of which is to be made for the year 1917) calculated to be sufficient, with accumulations, to retire the entire issue at or before maturity. The Sinking Fund is to be applicable to the purchase of Bonds in the market at not exceeding 105 and accrued interest, or by drawings at 105 on not less than ninety days' notice; the Bonds are also redeemable in amounts of not less than $10,000,000 on any interest date after 1st January, 1917, at 105 on not less than ninety days' notice.

"On the completion of the Readjustment the Bonds (by means of the deposit of securities and shares under the Plan of Readjustment) will be practically a prior lien charge on the entire Mexican Central Railway system (about 3,428 miles), and also practically a charge on the National Railroad Company of Mexico system (about 3,558 miles), subject to outstanding indebtedness of about $57,750,000 charged upon the property of the National Railroad Company, and subject, as to the lines of the Mexican International and Interoceanic Companies, to their respective outstanding issues, a large amount of which, comprising the voting control, is held by the National Railroad Company. Of the indebtedness of the National Railroad Company $33,000,000 can be redeemed on not more than six months' notice.

"Sufficient Prior Lien Bonds and General Mortgage Bonds are reserved to redeem the Bonds and obligations of the Mexican Central Railway Company, Limited, and the National Railroad Company of Mexico, the deposit of which is not invited by the Plan, WITH THE OBJECT THAT ULTIMATELY THE BONDS MAY BECOME AN ABSOLUTE FIRST CHARGE ON THE COMBINED PROPERTIES OF THE NATIONAL AND CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANIES."

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Board Can Only Determine Questions of Law and Fact—Other Decisions.

In overruling a protest filed by O. V. Pustau & Co. of New York the Board of United States General Appraisers decided yesterday that the tribunal sitting as a board of classification under Section 14 of the Customs Administrative act of 1890 is a statutory tribunal and has power to determine only questions of law and fact arising upon protest. It has no equity jurisdiction and no power to relieve an importer from his failure to take timely steps to secure reappraisement by a Board of the General Appraisers.

It appears from the record in the case that the importers were dissatisfied with the assessment made by the Collector on importations of matting. An appeal for a review of the Collector's action was made to a single General Appraiser. Although his decision was unsatisfactory to the importers, they failed to bring the issue before a reviewing board of three General Appraisers. The Collector thereupon exacted duty on the basis of the return made by the single General Appraiser. Later the importers attempted to upset the Collector's ruling, but the board holds that no relief can be granted, as the firm failed to appeal to a board of three Appraisers.

A decision was handed down overruling a claim filed by R. F. Downing & Co. of New York regarding the classification to be accorded automobile shoes. Free entry was claimed under the provision for parts actually used abroad for one year. General Appraiser Hay, who writes the decision for the board, says it is apparent that the shoes were not used abroad for the period of one year.

THE SUNDAY TIMES

The Picture Section.

One need not necessarily be a connoisseur in art to find enjoyment in three pages of reproductions of paintings which The Times will publish in its Picture Section to-morrow. They are selections from the one hundred and fortieth annual exhibition of the Royal Academy. In variety they are of an unusual range and they are certain to make a wide appeal to popular interest. The remaining pages of the Picture Section of the forthcoming issue will carry entertainment in uncommon degree. There will be a page of photographs of charming children; a page of very artistic photographs of young women who are well known in society circles in New York City; unusual photographs showing a scientist studying the activities of a volcano; pictures of a new bungalow built for Queen Alexandra; photographs showing the interior of the new Railroad Club; photographs of the Directoire costumes, which have made something of a sensation in the fashionable world of Paris; Memorial Day pictures, photographs of prominent actresses, and other pictures of interest and of information.

Jefferson Davis and His Place in History.

This is Memorial Day—a day which since the mighty conflict of '61 has been set apart by Americans as a day consecrated to the dead—"Under the roses the Blue, under the lilies the Gray." With the passing years has gone the bitterness of the strife; so also have receded the confused judgments of an unhappy hour. On this forty-seventh anniversary of the year which brought about Memorial Day, one may without passion or prejudice discuss the place which History will accord to the leader of the Lost Cause. Lincoln's place is assured. What will be that of Jefferson Davis? In a thoughtful and impartial way the subject is exhaustively discussed by Edward Cary in the Magazine Section of The Times to-morrow.

Japan Retaining a Grip on Manchuria.

Having finished his investigations in Korea and having told the readers of The Times the recent history of that land and its present status under Japanese rule, Mr. Thomas F. Millard has now turned his attention to Manchuria, and in the Magazine Section to-morrow he portrays the conditions existing in the vast region which Russia and Japan, in making their peace at Portsmouth, had agreed to completely and simultaneously evacuate. Mr. Millard finds that there has been no substantial restoration of China's sovereignty in Manchuria—that while Japan's grip is somewhat relaxed, it can nevertheless be tightened on an instant's notice.

What Cardinal Logue Has Seen in America.

To Cardinal Michael Logue, Roman Catholic Primate of All Ireland and Archbishop of Armagh, Joseph I. C. Clarke asked the question as to what had most impressed him during his visit to America. The reply of the eminent Prelate and the long interview which the distinguished writer had with the Cardinal forms one of the most attractive features of The Sunday Times. Few writers can draw so vivid a pen picture as can Mr. Clarke, and it was with rare skill that he portrayed the eminent visitor. The picture is truly an impressionistic one, and Mr. Clarke's account of his interview with the Cardinal most entertaining.

Justice Brewer on America's Future.

In the course of a few weeks David Josiah Brewer, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, will celebrate his seventy-first birthday. These seventy-one years cover a mighty span in the world's history, particularly so in that part of it which relates to America. In The Times to-morrow the venerable jurist discusses the great problems confronting the Nation and asserts his belief that "America is destined by an Almighty Providence for the leadership of the world, not merely in a material direction, but in the character of its manly men and pure women." It is fine, wholesome, uplifting reading.

Prof. Lounsbury on English—and Slang.

"Persons given up to slang eventually lose all sense of language. Used constantly, it is a mark of intellectual flabbiness." Thus does Prof. Thomas R. Lounsbury, Emeritus Professor of English at Yale, classify the users of slang. In The Times to-morrow the Professor expresses a profound belief in the wisdom of the English language—what it needs it will take; what it does not it will discard. With that somewhat heated discussion as to which nation uses the better English now in full swing, the opinion of this eminent authority is as timely as it is instructive.

The Cost of Living in City and Country.

From the language and its corruptions, the readers of the Sunday Times can turn to another of those discussions of the vexed problem of living—particularly of the problem of living on $35 a week. In this chapter of the series Agnes C. Laut shows that not only is it possible to live on $35 a week, but that there are millions of people who live on far less. In her usual direct and convincing style, the writer then proceeds to show how it is done.

The Riddle of Righthandedness.

As you take pen or pencil in hand, did it ever occur to you to ask yourself the question why you do so with your right hand instead of with your left? Have you, in fact, ever inquired into the mystery of righthandedness—why you habitually use your right hand more often than you do your left? The more you think of the subject the more you will become fascinated with the mystery of it. And it is not likely that you will rest satisfied until you have read the scientific explanation. This will be found in the Magazine Section of The Times to-morow.

New York City's Most Costly Mansion.

The great marble palace which Senator Clark has erected in this city has been, so far as the outside world is concerned, a house of mystery. Its portals have been assiduously guarded and no outsider might enter them. But a few days ago a writer for The Sunday Times was permitted to spend a half day in the costly mansion, and in the Magazine Section to-morrow he describes the magnificence of a structure on which $5,000,000 have been expended, irrespective of furnishings.

Richard Collins negotiated the sale of 127 West Eighty-seventh Street for Clarence W. Eckhardt to Emily L. Landon.

To Alter Fifth Avenue Dwelling.

The building plans filed yesterday revealed a very unusual alteration. The four-story dwelling at 448 Fifth Avenue, between Thirty-ninth and Fortieth Streets, owned by William V. Brady and Mrs. Cornelia B. Kip, is to be converted into a five-story American basement house at a cost of $5,000. The property is in the heart of the new business centre, and is but one door from the Knox Building on the Fortieth Street corner.

Middle West Side Purchase.

Maxwell Ziegeler has sold for the estate of Henry Luhrs to Mrs. K. Wilbert the four-story house 528 West Fortieth Street, 25 by 98.9.

Bergman & Turkel, cloak manufacturers, are the buyers of the ten-story loft building, 34 West Seventeenth Street, sold recently by Jacob Brown.

Deal for 94th Street Flat.

Fred Schmitt has sold for Gehry Brothers to John Wolf 245 East Ninety-fourth Street, a five-story flat on lot 25.8 by 100.

Tenant for 60th Street Building.

J. A. Dwyer has leased, for a long term, the building at 252 West Sixtieth Street. The lessees, the United States Engineering and Manufacturing Company, will use the building for its New York repair and storage station.

W. M. Benjamin, agent for the Fish Building, at the northeast corner of Fourth Avenue and Twelfth Street, has rented to the H. D. Berner & Winterbauer Company, manufacturers of beer pumps, the corner store and basement in that structure.

Realty Clearing House Assigns.

The Real Estate Clearing House Association, doing business at 31 East Seventeenth Street, made an assignment yesterday for the benefit of its creditors to I. Vernon Weisbrod. The concern was incorporated on Sept. 6, 1907, and furnished building statistics and information. The incorporators were W. E. Reilhan, A. B. Root, and James F. Collins. The latter was Secretary of the corporation.

Company Sells New Flats in Bronx.

Walter McLaughlin has sold for the Moorehead Realty and Construction Company one of the five-story houses recently constructed on the south side of 149th Street between St. Ann's and Bronx Avenues. The Moorehead Realty and Construction Company is now beginning work on three more houses on an adjoining plot.

Opening of Scarsdale Park.

Scarsdale Park will be opened to-day by Bloomingdale Brothers. It is believed that interest in this attractively located property will increase steadily, as has already been indicated by sales so far this season. Accessibility and beauty of environment are the chief factors in the unusual popularity of Scarsdale Park, where will be found beautiful residences, well-kept lawns, luxuriant shrubbery and excellent roads. The high elevation and the absence of marsh land combine to make healthful surroundings. The low prices in this section has caused much comment in view of the desirability of the land.

Southampton Cottages Rented.

Alfred E. Schermerhorn has rented at Southampton, L. I., for the coming season for Samuel L. Parrish his cottage on First Neck Lane to Major John McGaw Woodbury; for Mrs. James T. Kilbreth, Daisyfields, on First Neck Lane, to Stephen Peabody, and for Mrs. Alfred Nelson, Wild Rose, to William C. Gulliver.

Big Job in Titles Finished.

After examination of every farm title on Staten Island—an undertaking new in the history of title insurance considering the size of the territory involved—the Title Guarantee and Trust Company has announced that it is now ready to accept Richmond Borough business. For years the company refused to examine titles on Staten Island, as they were too intricate even for trained examiners and too dangerous from a financial standpoint to justify the risk without this long preparation. With the exception of a few salt marshes not likely to be developed in the near future, the work is now done. Troublesome boundaries have been located, and a complete locality plant has been finished.

No Business in the Salesrooms.

There were no offerings scheduled yesterday in the Real Estate Salesrooms, 14 and 16 Vesey Street.

NEW ENGLAND.

NEW ENGLAND VACATION RESORTS
Summering places in the most charming sections of New England are pictured and described in the 1908 Manual of Summer Resorts of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company. The shores of Long Island Sound, Buzzard's Bay and Cape Cod, Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket, the lovely Berkshire and Litchfield Hills, and the resorts of Connecticut and Eastern New York offer manifold attractions to the vacation seeker. The superb train service of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad makes these places easily accessible. The Manual contains fares from New York, list of hotels and boarding cottages and their rates. Send two-cent stamp for copy to C. A. Call, Room 6, Grand Central Station, New York, stating territory desired.

INDICT BROKER PRICE FOR "COTTON LEAK"

Federal Grand Juries in Washington and New York Find Bills Against Him.

CONSPIRACY AND BRIBERY

F. A. Peckham, Moses Haas, and E. H. Holmes Also Indicted—Price Released on $5,000 Bail.

Coincidently with the finding of indictments in Washington against Theodore H. Price, Frederick A. Peckham, Moses Haas, and E. H. Holmes on account of the "cotton leak" scandal of 1905, the Federal Grand Jury here handed down yesterday two indictments against Mr. Price, charging him on one count with conspiracy to defraud the Government and on the other with conspiracy to bribe a public officer.

Two other indictments were handed down yesterday, the contents of which were not made known, and the Price indictment was kept secret by United States District Attorney Stimson, on the theory that other defendants were concerned who were not yet in custody of the authorities here. The other individuals involved are understood, however, to include no one who is not already publicly under indictment in Washington.

Mr. Price, having been notified that indictments were found against him, appeared with his counsel, John D. Lindsay of the firm of Nicoll, Anable & Lindsay, before Judge Hough, in the United States Circuit Court, Criminal Branch, at 2 o'clock. The Clerk of the court announced the two indictments and their nature. Then Mr. Lindsay said regarding the matter of bail:

"I understand that these indictments refer to matters that happened three years ago, and that the statute of limitations would have run against the alleged offenses in three days. Under these circumstances, and in view of the fact that Mr. Price has long been well known in this community as a man of honesty and probity, I suggest that it would be perfectly safe to discharge him in my custody."

Assistant United States District Attorney Dorr opposed this course and asked for $10,000 bail, but Judge Hough thought that $5,000 was enough, and fixed the bond at that figure. The bail bond was signed by a representative of the American Surety Company, and Mr. Price left the building.

The investigation out of which the present indictments grew has been going on here for about three weeks. It is a relic of the cotton leak investigation which followed charges in the Spring of 1905 that Lewis C. Van Riper, Moses Haas, and Frederick A. Raymond had been instrumental in inducing E. H. Holmes, a clerk in the Department of Agriculture, to give out advance information on the figures in the Government cotton reports, on which there is always lively speculation on the Cotton Exchange. Haas and Raymond were arrested here, but discharged, and the clerk, Holmes, was indicted and put on trial in Washington, where Van Riper was accepted as a witness for the Government.

Mr. Van Riper testified among other things that his account had been carried through the Cotton Exchange firm of Hubbard Brothers here, in which the senior partner is a former President of the Cotton Exchange, and he brought the name of Mr. Price into the case as one of the participants in the deal that resulted in the leak of the cotton figures.

It is understood that the Government will contend that Mr. Price realized a profit of some $750,000 out of his alleged participation in the leak, and that he paid Raymond $125,000 of this amount. Holmes is said to have got $1,000.

The indictment of Mr. Price attracted wide attention in Wall Street yesterday, both because of his prominence in the cotton market and because of the fight that he has been making on the classification system of the New York Cotton Exchange, which Mr. Price contends has transformed the entire business of the Exchange into one huge gamble.

The fight between the Exchange and Mr. Price has been of an unusually bitter character, and Mr. Price referred to it in this statement, which he issued yesterday after his arrest.

> While an indictment is, of course, an exceedingly disagreeable experience to undergo, it is an accusation and not a proof, and I am aware that the Government has considered it necessary to take this action before the matter became outlawed on June 3 or thereabout. I feel no doubt whatever of the issue.
>
> The original "Cotton Leak" charges, made some three years ago, were based on the statement of Van Riper, the bucket-shop operator and a self-confessed participant and beneficiary, with others, of the alleged "Cotton Leak," and who conducted his account with Messrs. Hubbard Brothers & Co., and not with me.
>
> Ever since I brought an injunction suit against the New York Cotton Exchange a year ago the then and present dominant ring in the Exchange, who are my declared enemies, have moved every influence they could command to injure and cripple me, and have fostered the present craze for indictments, and especially indictments of Wall Street men. I am the objective point of attack of one of the most bitter trade wars ever prevailing in this country, but I am not unused to fighting, and propose to leave no stone unturned to vindicate my good name and discomfort my enemies.
>
> When the "Cotton Leak" case first became public I emphatically asserted my innocence of the charges made in the indictment or of any kindred offense, and I now repeat this statement, which I trust my friends will accept pending a decision of the issue.

Judge Hough issued bench warrants yesterday for the other persons indicted here.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The Grand Jury investigation of the leak of information concerning the cotton reports of the Department of Agriculture in 1905 ended to-day. Four indictments were returned. The men involved in the indictments are Theodore H. Price, Moses Haas, and Frederick A. Beckham of New York, and Edwin S. Holmes, Jr., of this city, at that time associate statistician of the Department of Agriculture.

The indictments charge that Mr. Price conspired with Haas, Beckham, and Holmes to induce Holmes to furnish advance information concerning the cotton reports. The indictments also charge the three New York cotton dealers with conspiring to bribe Holmes to make certain alterations in his reports.

Several overt acts are set forth in the indictments. Among them a conference in New York May 31, 1905, between Mr. Price and Mr. Haas, a trip to Washington by Mr. Haas in furtherance of the conspiracy, where, it is alleged, he met Holmes and paid him for the information desired.

LONG LOST BABES FOUND DEAD

Thought to Have Been Killed by Demented Mother Last December.

BROCTON, Mass., May 29.—The bodies of Thomas Ball, the seven-year-old son, and Grace Ball, the little daughter, of Mrs. Mary Ball, were found buried in a field this afternoon.

While in a demented condition Mrs. Ball, who is now an inmate of the Taunton Insane Asylum, wandered away with her two children last December. Several days later the mother was found, but until today there had been no trace of her children, and the mother could not tell what had become of them. It is believed that she killed both of the little ones and hid their bodies.

Boy Missing; Talk of Kidnapping.

The parents and schoolmates of Frank L. Marcelle, Jr., of Bath Beach, as well as the police all over the city, are looking for the seven-year-old youngster who has been missing since last Wednesday. The lad's parents fear that he has been kidnapped, but the police learned that he had been seen on Wednesday on a pier at the foot of Bay Nineteenth Street, and thinking that he had fallen into the water they dragged the bay for some distance on Thursday and yesterday afternoon. No trace of the boy has been found.

Won't Revoke Lotos Club Contract.

The Appellate Division refused yesterday the appeal of the Lotos Club from an order denying it a release from a contract to purchase the property 556 and 558 Fifth Avenue for $750,000. The case will now go to trial. The club asked to be released from its contract for purchase on the ground that the property encroached on Fifth Avenue. An action was then begun to compel them to carry it out, and the Appellate Division held yesterday that the case must go to trial.

To Show Municipal Building Designs.

The designs in the competition for the Municipal Building to be erected on a site bounded by Park Row, Centre Street, Duane Street, and Tryon Row, will be exhibited next week at the Museum of Natural History, Seventy-seventh Street and Central Park West. TOWER SKYSCRAPERS PLANNED FOR FUTURE

Architects Would Limit the Area Which a Building May Cover as Height Grows.

REPORT BY ERNEST FLAGG

Recommendations to Code Revisers, if Adopted, Mean a Marked Change in Construction of High Buildings.

Recommendations made to the Building Code Revision Commission by a joint committee representing the American Institute of Architects and the Society of Beaux Arts Architects, provide for a reduction in the area which a building may cover, as its height is increased, and will, if adopted, mean the end of skyscraper construction as at present practiced in this city.

Up to 185 feet, according to these recommendations, the percentage of the plot to be left vacant is found by dividing twice the square of the distance above the curb by 1,000.

In explaining how this would work out, Ernest Flagg, who was Chairman of the Committee of the Society of Beaux Arts Architects, said yesterday:

"At a height of eighteen feet there would be about enough court space to provide a shaft sufficient to ventilate the cellar. At a height of fifty feet the area to be left vacant would be 5 per cent. of the area of the lot, but this would only apply to corner lots 2,500 square feet in area or less, for there is a clause that the percentage of vacant space above eighteen feet above the curb must not fall below 10 per cent.

"At 100 feet the vacant area would be 20 per cent., at 150 feet 45 per cent., and at 185 feet, the extreme limited height under this paragraph, about 68½ per cent., but the average, we find, for the whole 185 feet would be somewhat less than 30 per cent."

This means that up to 185 feet, by striking an average of all the floor areas, an owner could put up a structure which—even with the diminishing size toward the top, would be equivalent to a building built according to present ideas and covering something over 70 per cent. of the lot area. Above 185 feet the builder of the future, according to the architects' recommendations, ought to be allowed to go skyward only in accordance with the following formula:

"A certain portion of any plot may be built upon to any height. To ascertain this area add to the area of the plot one-half of the area of the street or streets opposite the façade or façades of the building and divide by four."

As an illustration of what could be done under this provision, Mr. Flagg said that an ordinary sized lot, 25 by 100, on a 60-foot street, could with the addition of half the street area be made to provide for a tower with a base of 815 square feet, to be built upon to any practicable height above 185 feet. This result is arrived at by adding to 2,500 square feet one-half of the street area in front of the lot, that is, one-half of 25 times 60, or 750. This gives a total of 3,250, which divided by 4 gives about 815.

As another example Mr. Flagg took a corner lot, 100 by 100, at the intersection of two streets, one sixty feet wide and the other 100 feet wide. Forty-five per cent. of such a lot could be used for power building above the height of 185 feet. "Upon a triangular plot," added Mr. Flagg, "like those occupied by the Flatiron and Times Buildings, almost the entire area could be covered to a greater height than 185 feet."

Another proposal of importance made by the architects is that an owner of land may, by purchase or otherwise, acquire the rights of adjoining land for the purpose of building above 185 feet on his own land over an area proportioned to the combined land area which he controls by reason of having secured the rights of the adjoining owner.

This provision, Mr. Flagg points out, will provide on owner with compensation when his plot is used to furnish light and air to a neighboring building. Whereas he is now liable to have it so used without compensation.

Except on corner plots it is provided that the cornice line shall be fixed at 100 feet above the curb.

JERSEY DISTILLERY RAIDED.

Revenue Officers Allege They Found Illicit Still in Passaic.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., May 29.—Six prisoners taken in a raid on a brandy distillery in Tenth Street, Passaic, on Thursday night were before United States Commissioner William Nelson to-day. They were held in $1,000 bail for trial.

The raid was on a distillery alleged to be owned by Reuben Prady. The internal revenue men assert that they discovered an illicit still with a capacity of 400 gallons a day running in the establishment, which means that the Government lost about $400 every day it was in operation. It is said that the officers discovered five barrels of whisky which had been refilled. Prady is bonded as a fruit brandy distiller. He is said to have owned at one time a saloon in New York City. Prady was arrested with five of his employes.

Rob Newark Police Headquarters.

Thieves have been at work recently in Police Headquarters in Newark, N. J., according to a statement made yesterday by Secretary Cox of the Police Board. A suit of clothes and some cigars were stolen and a desk tampered with.

Jersey Organizes a Crime Commission.

TRENTON, N. J., May 29.—The commission to investigate the causes of dependency and crime organized to-day, with Senator Michael T. Barrett of Newark, President, and Edward A. Ransom, Jr., of Hoboken, Secretary. Prof. Prince of Columbia University, who represents Passaic County in the Assembly, was named as advisory member of the commission. The Duchess of Marlborough and Mrs. Clarence Mackay are interested in this commission.

IN NEW JERSEY.

Certain civic and military organizations have made the charge against Public Schools 7 and 8 in Bayonne that the American flag is not displayed over the buildings, and, in the case of one of them, that the reading of the Bible has been omitted, although the rules of the Board of Education provide for such reading at the daily exercises. The charges will be considered at the board's next meeting.

Louis Heppe was arrested by the Newark police yesterday while he was seeking Mrs. Victoria Schuster, who had rejected his love, in order to kill her and himself. After being lodged in a cell, he attempted suicide by throwing himself against the stone wall of the prison.

A sextet of aggrieved wives appeared before Judge Howell in Newark yesterday morning and presented charges against six respective husbands who were arranged in a row on the other side of the court. The charges ranged from desertion to the case of a man who was willing to support his wife and five children, but balked on five stepchildren additional. The cases were disposed of quickly.

General warning is being sent out to New Jersey commuters to beware of a short, fat, red-headed man. He steals lawn mowers. Several persons in Newark yesterday saw the unknown march away with the lawn mower belonging to Louis Louis of 728 Clinton Avenue and later he partly completed his Summer outfit by acquiring a pair of shears, a hoe, and a rake. All he needs, according to Newark detectives, is a wheelbarrow and a straw hat, and owners of these are urged to be vigilant.

TO ASK SUBWAY ADVANCES.

Utilities Board Wants a Grant of One-sixth Fourth Avenue Line's Cost.

In an endeavor to meet the objections of Controller Metz to any large expenditure of the city's money at present and to make some advance in the construction of the Fourth Avenue Subway, the Public Service Commission decided yesterday to ask the Board of Estimate for only about one-sixth of the total cost of the line. A grant upon every section will, however, be requested, and so if the commission gets its way the city will be pledged to the completion of the whole project. The commission asks for these advances:

On the section from Nassau to Willoughby Street, $200,000 for railroad work and $20,000 for galleries; from Willoughby Street to Ashland Place, $500,000 for railroad work and $10,000 for pipe galleries; from Ashland Place to Sackett Street, $500,000 for railroad work and $30,000 for galleries; from Sackett Street to Tenth Street, $500,000 for railroad work and $30,000 for galleries; from Tenth Street to Twenty-seventh Street, $500,000 for railroad work and $30,000 for pipe galleries, and from Twenty-seventh Street to Forty-third Street, $500,000 for railroad work and $30,000 for pipe galleries.

This will bring up the amount which the city will be asked at the next meeting of the board to provide to $2,850,000, of which $2,7000,000 will be for railroad work and $150,000 for pipe galleries. The total cost of the subway when complete will be $15,886,361.

When Controller Metz was asked yesterday about the policy of voting only a part of the sum which will be required in the end he said:

"The commission has a legal right to ask us, if it chooses, for only a part of the money that will be needed, but if we grant it we are pledged to the whole plan. I don't want to commit the city to another hole in the ground. The subway loop which we are building now is no good to anybody but the B. R. T., and now it won't use it. What we want is one comprehensive plan which will do something, and not a number of sections of plans. You can't do anything for Brooklyn without the B. R. T. It's no use talking. I don't blame it for not wanting the loop. It simply means that they have to haul their passengers another three miles for nothing."

OPPOSE TRACTION DECISION.

Counsel Fighting Issue of Receivers' Certificates Ask a Rehearing.

Counsel representing the Morton and Guaranty Trust Companies, the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, and other interests opposing the issuance of receivers' certificates to the amount of $3,500,000 by Federal Receivers Joline and Robinson of the New York City and Metropolitan Street Railway Companies, appeared before Judges Ward and Holt, sitting as the United States Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday, and pleaded for a rehearing in the matter of the issue of certificates. They want a paragraph added to the decision, which from their point of view is not a satisfactory modification of Judge Lacombe's order.

In the argument for the rehearing, counsel asserted that the Circuit Court had apparently adjudicated upon points still in dispute, had increased the interest on the certificates from 5 to 6 per cent., and to insure the marketability of the certificates as a guarantee of payment, had included, besides the net income of the two companies, property owned by the corporations not covered by the mortgages owned by the New York City and Metropolitan Street Railway Companies, which would in no wise be benefited by the proposed improvements. Judges Ward and Holt reserved decision.

Before applying to the special session the lawyers presented the matter to Judge Lacombe, in the United States Court, but Judge Lacombe said that he could not undertake to review or add to a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals. He did take occasion to remark that if something was not done soon about the certificates he would have to appoint a receiver to look after bankrupt receivers.

SUES FULTON STREET ROAD.

Guaranty Trust Co. Wants Receivers Named to Insure Payment on Mortgage

The law firm of Davies, Stone & Auerbach of 34 Nassau Street filed in the United States Circuit Court yesterday papers in a suit brought by the Guaranty Trust Company of New York as trustee under a mortgage made by the Fulton Street Railroad Company. The Metropolitan Street Railway Company, Receivers Joline and Robinson, the Morton Trust Company, the New York City Railway Company, the Pennsylvania Steel Company, and the Degnon Contracting Company are named as co-plaintiffs in the action.

The complaint alleges that prior to Jan. 31, 1896, the Fulton Street Railroad Company, authorized the issuance of a series of bonds not to exceed $500,000 at 4 per cent., dated Nov. 1, 1895. On Jan. 31, 1896, the Fulton Street Railroad Company made to the complainant as trustee a mortgage in which it conveyed all its real and personal property. The complaint asserts that on May 1, 1908, the defendant company defaulted in payment of interest and also in the payment of taxes, and the latter default resulted in a lien prior to that of the mortgage. The Guaranty Trust Company says it fears the lien may be enforced to its prejudice.

The Guaranty Trust Company asks that the Circuit Court set a date for the defaulted payments to be made. If the defendant defaults then, the Trust Company asks that the property be sold subject to the mortgage. In the meantime the Trust Company asks that receivers be appointed. The Fulton Street Railroad is at present operated by the Federal receivers Messrs. Joline and Robinson.

RENEW BELMONT TUBE OFFER.

Bryan Asks Utilities Board to Reconsider Plan for Its Purchase.

The Interborough Rapid Transit Company has renewed negotiations with the city for the purchase of the Steinway tunnel under the East River at Forty-second Street. E. P. Bryan, President of the company, wrote a day or two ago to Chairman Willcox of the Public Service Commission, pointing out that the Frawley bill had conferred power on the commission to consider the matter, and asking him to discuss the matter on the basis of the offer of the Interborough last February. This suggested that the city should pay the builders of the tunnel about $7,239,476 for it.

It was also proposed that the city should undertake the operation of the tunnel in connection with the New York and Queens County Railway Company, the surface lines of which communicate with the tunnel. The expenses of this would, it was suggested, be arbitrarily fixed and divided between the city and the company. One 5-cent fare was to be charged from Forty-second Street to any point on the lines of the Queens County road.

WINS CLEAN CAR CRUSADE.

Receiver for Forty-second Street Line Admits Cars Were Not Well Cared For

F. W. Whitridge, receiver of the Forty-second Street, Manhattanville & St. Nicholas Avenue Railway Company, has acknowledged to the Public Service Commission that after all Assemblyman H. Burr Wright was justified in his contention that the cars on the crosstown Forty-second Street line were in poor condition.

Yesterday a letter was read at a hearing upon the subject before the commission in which Whitridge announced that he had discharged a foreman for negligence, and care would be taken to remedy the nuisance. Frank Bennett, an Inspector of the commission, reported that there had already been an improvement, and that the open cars were in excellent condition.

MORE TRAINS FOR THE BRONX.

Utilities Board Orders Central to Increase Local Service.

Orders were issued yesterday by the Public Service Commission to the New York Central to increase materially its local Bronx service. Twenty-three north-bound trains instead of sixteen will now stop at all important stations in the Bronx, and twenty-four instead of fifteen south-bound.

In order to lessen the congestion of traffic in 125th Street, it was ordered that in future cars of the Third Avenue line must go the whole way along the street instead of turning back at Eighth Avenue. The minimum headway, except between 2 and 5 o'clock in the morning, must be ten minutes, and in every quarter of an hour there must be 10 per cent. more seats than the total number of passengers carried.

OIL EXPERTS DEFEND STANDARD OIL CO.

They Testify That Extravagance in Use of Oil by Big Roads Offsets Low Price Charged.

COST LESS TO LITTLE ROADS

The Higher Prices They Pay More Than Made Up by Economy, Witnesses Say—Underwood to Testify.

The Standard Oil Company is now having its innings in the suit brought by the Government against the New Jersey corporation on the ground that it is a trust and acting in restraint of trade. Yesterday the Standard's lawyers apparently succeeded in picking a hole in one phase at least of the case that has been built up by months of patient work by Frank B. Kellogg, the Government's lawyer. And they say they have a number of surprises in store.

The Government's contention was that some railroads were compelled by the Galena-Signal Oil Company, a Standard subsidiary, to pay far more for their lubricating oil than other and more favored roads. The Government's argument was that any company which is in a position to dictate to the railroads of the country what each road should pay for its lubrication was most assuredly a trust and operating in restraint of trade.

The Galena-Signal Company, it was testified yesterday, lubricates the railroads at varying prices, but if one railroad is more extravagant in the use of oil than another it is only natural, according to the witnesses, that the more extravagant road would have to pay more than a road which is less extravagant, even though it pays less per gallon for its oil. Alexander Turner, one of the Galena-Signal Company's experts, was on the stand yesterday when Moritz Rosenthal, the Standard's leading lawyer, asked: "If the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha road can run three times as far on a given quantity of oil as does the Pennsylvania Railroad, does it indicate a difference in cost?"

"Yes," replied the witness.

"And if the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha pays 36 cents per gallon for its oil and the Pennsylvania Railroad pays only 18 cents a gallon, as it does, would that indicate that the former road is getting its lubrication cheaper than the Pennsylvania?"

"It would," replied Mr. Turner. The expert also testified that the Chicago, Lake Shore & Eastern gets three times as much service out of a pint of oil as does the Pennsylvania, although the former pays much more for its oil than the Pennsylvania does. Mr. Rosenthal asked the witness if this would indicate that the Lake Shore is getting its lubrication cheaper. Mr. Turner said that it most assuredly would.

It was brought out that the Chicago & Northwestern runs its engines seventy-nine miles on a pint of Galena-Signal oil, while the Pennsylvania's engines run only thirty-three miles on a pint of the same kind of oil. And Mr. Turner said the former, paying twice as much as the latter road for its oil, got its lubrication cheaply.

He was then asked if the invoice price makes any material difference in what the lubrication actually costs a railroad. The Galena-Signal expert said that it would make no difference. He also told of the Chicago & Alton Road and of the economical way in which the oil was used on its rolling stock owing to the expert service of the Galena-Signal Company. Mr. Kellogg, on cross-examination, sought to break the witness down on this point.

"Do you mean to say that in your opinion the Chicago & Alton got its lubrication in 1904 as cheaply as the Pennsylvania?" asked the Government's lawyer.

"I should judge so," replied Mr. Turner. He said that the invoice price to both companies was 48 cents for valve oil and 28 cents for engine oil, although the Pennsylvania paid only 18½ cents for its valve oil, while the other road paid the full invoice price of 48 cents.

"Now," said Mr. Kellogg, "in 1904 the Pennsylvania paid $1.30 per 1,000 miles for its lubrication and the Chicago & Alton paid $1.86. Don't you think that those figures would indicate that the Chicago & Alton paid more for its oil?"

Mr. Turner said that the question was not a fair one, because he did not know the performance of the engines per pint of oil.

E. W. Hayes, another Galena-Signal expert, who had been a railroad man for thirty-two years, testified that the company had saved hundreds of thousands of dollars for the railroads of the country.

Next week a number of railroad Presidents, including President Underwood of the Erie, will go on the witness stand to testify for the Standard Oil Company, and the most important phase of the Standard's defense will be placed upon the records.

BROOKLYN CAR STRIKE RUMOR

Conductors on Coney Island & Brooklyn Railroad Object to New Orders.

There is some talk in Brooklyn among employes of the Coney Island and Brooklyn Railroad of a strike because of new duties imposed on the conductors. The matter has not yet begun to look serious, but the officials of the company have made arrangements to handle any situation which might arise.

Some of the employes took exception to having to handle transfers and ring up fares after they were paid. Until a short time ago the transfers were issued by agents stationed at the transfer points and the fares were rung up as the passengers boarded the cars.

President Huff of the company, when he heard there was trouble brewing, got the assurances that, at the proper time, if the thing came to a head, he could have enough men to break the strike before it was fairly under way.

The majority of the employes say that the strike talk should not be taken seriously.

AT WAR WITH UNION WOMEN.

Orange Hat Manufacturers Declare for Open Shop for Trimmers.

All negotiations with the Orange (N. J.) union of hat trimmers, who are women, have been broken off by the employers. In a statement issued last night by the manufacturers it was declared that if the women had been satisfied to negotiate in a businesslike way the difficulty would have been settled long ago. The statement says:

> We are all union hat manufacturers, and have no quarrel whatever with unions. The questions at issue would have been settled long ago but for the suspicious, unreasonable, unbusinesslike, and obstinate attitude assumed by the women who are at the head of the trimmers' association. In no instance could we persuade the women to live up to the laws of their association.

The statement in effect declares for the open shop in the hatting trade.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY ECONOMY

Reduction in Expenses Results in a Net Increase of 34% for April.

Commenting on the large reduction in expenses shown by the Southern Railway in its statement for the month of April, an official of that road said yesterday:

"The main problem confronting me, in view of the loss in gross, has been to cut down expenses in a greater ratio than the decrease of gross, in order to provide net earnings sufficient to meet the stable factor of fixed charges. This has been done, as shown by the decrease in operating expenses for the month of $1,098,161, or 26 per cent., while the gross earnings fell off 18 per cent., leaving an expansion in net of 34 per cent.

The ratio of operating expenses to gross earnings in April was 75.56 per cent., compared with 75.70 per cent. in March and 84.94 per cent. in April, 1907, showing a curtailment in this item of nearly 10 per cent. from last year's April operating outlay.

"We believe this saving in expenses was made without failure to reasonably maintain the property, most of it having been accomplished by a decrease in the cost of conducting transportation, which, in April was cut down 62.16 per cent."

MEXICAN MERGER BOND OFFER

Issue of $13,750,000 to be Placed Here and Abroad.

The bankers who have undertaken the financing of the merger of the Mexican Central and National Railroad of Mexico, which was recently declared effective, have arranged for an international offering of $13,750,000 prior lien 4½ per cent. bonds of the National Railways of Mexico. The bonds are redeemable in gold, are provided with a sinking fund, and mature July 1, 1957. The bonds will be placed chiefly abroad. They were quoted in the London market yesterday at a premium of 1½ per cent.

The prior lien bonds are a first lien on all the securities deposited under the plan of readjustment, and are ultimately to become a first lien upon the combined properties of the National Railroad Company of Mexico and the Mexican Central Railway Company. The subscriptions, which will be closed at or before 3 o'clock next Wednesday, will be received in New York by Speyer & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., Hallgarten & Co., and Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., and simultaneously in London, Amsterdam, and Geneva, Switzerland. Subscriptions will also be received in Boston by Kidder, Peabody & Co.

DEFICIT FOR PACIFIC MAIL.

President Harriman Reports a General Falling Off in Business.

The Pacific Mail Steamship Company issued yesterday a preliminary statement for the year ended April 30 last, showing receipts of $4,336,312 and expenses of $4,367,635, a deficit of $31,322. This deficit was further increased by $397,494, charged for depreciation and for extraordinary repair of steamers.

President E. H. Harriman in a statement to the shareholders says:

"Compared with the operations of the preceding year, the receipts from the operation of steamers decreased $520,514.15, and receipts from all other sources increased $17,582.17, a net decrease of $502,931.98. There was a general falling off in business, and the shrinkage was augmented by the shortage in the coffee crop of about one-half the usual crop, the restriction of Japanese immigration, the extreme enforcement of the Chinese exclusion laws, and the competition for the existing traffic by a large ocean tonnage seeking employment."

TROLLEY REORGANIZATION.

Bankers Interested in 3 Failed Jersey Lines Form Protective Committee.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, May 29.—At a meeting this afternoon here of the bondholders of the New York-Philadelphia Railway Company, which holding corporation hold the stock of the New Jersey Short Line Railway Company, the Trenton & New Brunswick Railway Company, and 75 per cent. of the stock of the Camden & Trenton Railway Company, a Bondholders' Protective Committee was formed, composed of Hugh H. Hamill, President of the Trenton Trust and Safe Deposit Company; ex-Judge Harmon D. Yerkes of Philadelphia, and Samuel Rice of New York.

The New York-Philadelphia Company is also a large creditor of the three companies, now in the hands of receivers, and the Protective Committee was formed to take care of the interests of the bondholders, and may eventually be the nucleus of a Reorganization Committee, which will put the trolley lines from Camden to New Brunswick in good running order again after the receivership has been discharged. The bankers will meet again next Tuesday.

FOR NEW PACIFIC LINE.

C., M. & St. P. Closes Contract with a Japanese Steamer Line.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 29.—The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul has definitely closed a contract with a Japanese steamship line for a service to Oriental ports in connection with the extension of the St. Paul system to the Puget Sound ports. The present agreement covers only freight traffic, but an understanding has also been reached regarding passenger traffic should sufficient business develop to warrant a new line to the Orient.

The company with which the St. Paul has made its contract is the Osaka Shoshen Kaisha, which operates a total of 106 vessels in trade between Japanese and other Oriental ports. The company has agreed to place six new steamers in the service between the Far East and Seattle and Tacoma and to maintain semi-monthly sailings from those ports. The contract runs for ten years.

Favorable progress is being made on the construction of the new Pacific line.

Pneumatic Service Co. Report.

THE ORACLE.

By ARTHUR DAVISON FICKE.

I LAY upon the Summer grass.
  A gold-haired, sunny child came by,
And looked at me, as loath to pass,
  With questions in her lingering eye.

She stopped and wavered, then drew near,
  (Ah! the pale gold around her head!)
And o'er my shoulder stooped to peer.
  "Why do you read?" she said.

"I read a poet of old time,
  Who sang through all his living hours—
Beauty of earth—the streams, the flowers—
  And stars, more lovely than his rhyme.

"And now I read him, since men go,
  Forgetful of these sweetest things;
Since he and I love brooks that flow,
  And dawns, and bees, and flash of wings!"

She stared at me with laughing look,
  Then clasped her hands upon my knees:
"How strange to read it in a book!
  I could have told you all of these!"

—From "The Earth Passion," (The Samurai Press, Cranleigh, Surrey, England.)

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

THE dispute over the Shakespeare memorial continues in London. A committee has been formed to insist upon using the large sum of money to be collected for the establishment of a national playhouse instead of the erection of a sculptured monument at the top of Portland Place. Yet the monument was decided upon some time ago, while many of the most intelligent actors and dramatists do not believe that a national theatre, thus established, would be of any permanent value. It seems that the tribute to Shakespeare's fame, in which all the world is interested, ought not to be too closely associated with the stage. Shakespeare is, first of all, the greatest of English poets. The study of his works is a study of the language and its literature, of the growth of culture, of history, of the social fabric in the renascence. It is only in a smaller sense a study of theatricals. The great Shakespearean scholars, from Theobald to Dowden and Furness, have not been actors. We cannot name an actor renowned as a true Shakespearean scholar. It is not a part of the actor's training to be a philologist, a student of language, a critic, a historian. Lamb's wrath over the Garrick-Shakespeare effigy in Westminster Abbey is well remembered. Yet when did the actors ever have a more devoted and sympathetic friend than Charles Lamb? The genius of Shakespeare was a poet's genius, and the study of Shakespeare is a literary pursuit. It is English literature which is to be glorified in the great tribute to the poet, the lasting memorial. A memorial building—an academy and library combined—would be a sensible form for the tribute. But, so far as we can learn, the group of statuary, terraced, with the green trees and flowers of Regent's Park as a background, is the form it will inevitably take.

Mr. Henry James is of the opinion, as noted elsewhere this week, that a short story must be either an anecdote or a picture. The remark is distinguished by Mr. James's usual cryptic quality, but its meaning can be deciphered without great difficulty. But that a short story should contain one completed picture, if it is not one, seems a reasonable theory. Magazine readers have lately discovered a new writer whose short stories are perfect pictures. That is to say, this writer, Muriel Campbell Dyar, first discovered herself, and then toilsomely compelled the editors to discover her. The privilege of the readers to discover her came later. Her story called "The Mother Bird," lately published in Harper's Magazine, has striking pictorial quality. Its spirit is grave, though the author's outlook is not altogether solemn; her vision is so keen that she sees more than tragedy in life, but the effect of "The Mother Bird" is the effect of tragedy. In the June Harper's, "The Oversight," another capital story by this writer, not much as a mere story but wonderfully impressive as a picture of life, has something of the charm of verity associated with the rural tales of Miss Jewett and Miss Wilkins. But if Muriel Campbell Dyar belongs to their school, she is not the less an original artist, relying on her own observation, and expounding her own philosophy of life. She knows the people she writes about, the narrowing influences on human character of the dull farm routine, the sordidness, the selfishness, the paltryness of it all. Enough has been written of the good cheer, the wholesome influence, of country life. There is another side, as Hawthorne knew, as these short story writers of ours know, who are probably doing the best work in American fiction just now.

Is the literary woman about to desert the field of the novel for the drama? According to the news of the week there are three notable defections from the ranks of fiction in favor of the theatre. Thus, Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett is reported to be at work on a dramatization of that part of her latest novel, "The Shuttle" in which G. Selden is the central figure. Then, after she has finished this play, she will take up the rest of "The Shuttle" as material for still another drama, whose main point of interest will be the character of Bettina. This is not, of course, Mrs. Burnett's first attempt to write for the stage, her dramatization of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" marking a successful venture in that field. Two plays from one novel, however, is somewhat of a record breaker, and may be taken as an additional evidence of a growing tendency on the part of the novelist to turn his or her work in fiction to account in the drama. Then there is Mrs. Humphry Ward, who has recently staged with gratifying success her novel "The Marriage of William Ashe." and whose writing, so various critics aver, is assuming a good deal more of a dramatic spirit and form than it did in the "Robert Elsmere" days. Finally, there is Mrs. Atherton, who is said to be "in retreat" in Germany, where she is at work on a play, in collaboration with another writer, who is chosen for his acquirements in the matter of stage technique. Whether Mrs. Atherton is dramatizing one of her own novels, or whether she has struck out into some new field for her subject, is not divulged. The point of interest is that just now she, together with Mrs. Ward and Mrs. Burnett, is devoting so much attention to the writing of plays rather than of novels.

For those pessimistic souls who would fain have us believe that the "feature" least wanted by the publishers is a work by an unknown author, it might be of interest to know that a prominent London house in advertising the merits of a new novel emphasizes, in large type, in the current Times Literary Supplement, the single fact that it is the work of "A New Novelist." One does not often see advertisements of this character in this country; nevertheless American publishers, with scarcely an exception, are known to be on the lookout for just that very elusive kind of person, the new novelist, the new poet, the new writer of short stories. The trouble is that the man who has never written fiction before, when he does attempt his first novel is not therefore "a new novelist" in the estimation of the publisher to whom he offers his wares. As a matter of fact, the latter may be, and too often are the mere shreds and patches from the work of other men who have already achieved their fame. Literary thievery, according to the publishers in this country, is far from being uncommon. Its practice by would-be authors has necessitated the adoption of some rather stringent rules by publishers to whom are submitted scores of manuscripts every day from writers whose identity is unknown. One New York house will not accept anything for publication in the columns of its magazine or in book form without an assurance from some responsible person as to the credibility of the author offering the manuscript. Nevertheless, this same publishing house, although protecting itself thus carefully from the purloiner of other men's literary property—of which a particularly glaring case was cited in these columns last week—is quite as eager as its London confrère to discover and introduce to the world "a new novelist."

A book that bids fair to take high rank among recent discoveries of literary reliques is to be offered for sale at a London auction next week. "The King's Book, 1648," is the way the quaint volume, with its old calf binding, is listed, and the information is given that this book was the companion of King Charles I. during his imprisonment at Carisbrooke Castle. It is a volume of old quarto plays, selected by King Charles, and bound together "for his amusement and profit." A table of contents in the King's handwriting is on the fly leaf. Naturally the loyal Briton will peruse the list with interest, since, under the peculiar circumstances surrounding the choice and perusal of the volume by its original owner, it should be something of an index to the literary tastes of a monarch who was supposed to be by no means uncultivated in his tastes. Hence, it will be somewhat of a disappointment to those who would like to have their Kings on the right side in matters literary to learn that Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, and other giants of the English theatre were not among King Charles's favorites, while a host of decidedly minor dramatists of the middle period were.

SPENCER'S HUMAN SIDE.

Prof. David Duncan's Work Gives a New and Thoroughly Intimate Picture of the Author of "Synthetic Philosophy."

SOME MISCONCEPTIONS CORRECTED.

An Amazing Genius Traced Through Reminiscence and Letters from Youth to Old Age.

IN SPITE of the varied abuse it received, the uncertain impression it made on the public mind, its amazing illustration of the lack of proportion of its author's character, there is little doubt that the autobiography of Herbert Spencer will live as one of the great self-revelatory works of literature. It is not, to be sure, easy reading; it lacks, therefore, the charm of Rousseau and of those sixteen volumes of letters which show to the world every facet of the character of Horace Walpole. "Ponderous," an English reviewer, since the publication in London of Dr. Duncan's admirable biography, has called the autobiography, and the adjective fits. But its value lies in its verity, in its point of view, in its very denotement of egoism, in its frank statement of false as well as sound views of art and literature, of life itself; in short, in its unquestioned sincerity. In years to come that autobiography of Herbert Spencer, the philosopher whose particular school of philosophy scarcely outlived him, will be used as a source of inspiration and information by many authors. Its comparative failure on publication is easily explained. It was not just what it was expected to be.

Dr. Duncan's biography is welcome. It is not founded on the autobiography. Twenty-eight years ago Mr. Spencer asked Dr. Duncan to write his life. As late as the Spring of 1893 he repeated the request, and in his will he directed that the biography (in one volume of moderate size) should contain such materials as had not been used in his own book, together with an account of that part of his life not covered by the autobiography, twenty-one years. The biography now appears in two volumes of something over 400 pages each, but there is not too much of it. Exposition and criticism of the philosophy of evolution it avoids. But it contains many of Spencer's letters and a paper on "The Filiation of Ideas," written in 1899, which is "an intellectual history of himself."

Dr. Duncan was a close friend of Spencer, and his narrative of the great man's life is lucid in expression, coherent in arrangement, and always readable. It pictures the man as he was from boyhood to old age. The self-confidence of his youth—if he ever had doubts of his usefulness to society he never admitted them—his courage, his energy, his pride, are clearly set forth. Even as a boy his intellectual capacity was amazing. His insight amounted to genius. His greatest failing, as both his own account of his life and Dr. Duncan's biography show, was that his original ideas were frequently not compared with the knowledge stored in books. His reading, especially in his youth, was desultory. In the study of mathematics he was well grounded, but he said himself that he read little, and that impatiently, in the eight years of his work at engineering. He never read Locke until after he had finished "Social Statics," though there had been for years a copy on his father's shelves. He never read any of Bacon except the essays.

The letter containing these statements, and many others as amazing, written to Sir Leslie Stephen late in life, is one of the most significant of Dr. Duncan's selection from Spencer's correspondence. It shows, as the whole book does, the human side of the philosopher, his weaknesses in contrast with his strength. The biography, for this reason and many others, is an uncommonly interesting work. It is one, also, that will find a host of readers well prepared by this time for the story it has to tell. Its chief charm, perhaps, lies in its fresh revelation of Spencer's relations to his fellow-men, his kindly affection, his sensitiveness, his doubts. He was not, after all, the self-satisfied man of facts he has seemed to the world. The false impression, which the autobiography did not correct, is now removed. His letters to his father and particularly his letters to Lady Pembroke reveal the gentler side of his nature.

*LIFE AND LETTERS OF HERBERT SPENCER. By David Duncan, LL. D. In two volumes. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

A DEFENDER OF THE CONSTITUTION

Stephen A. Douglas Subject of a Biography by Prof. Johnson —A Brilliantly Inconsistent Career.

WHEN Douglas lay upon his deathbed and his devoted wife asked him tenderly if he had any message for his boys, "Robbie" and "Stevie," he replied with great difficulty, but clearly and emphatically: "Tell them to obey the laws and support the Constitution of the United States." It is worth while to revive the memory of a man like Douglas at a time when the Constitution is regarded as an outworn instrument by so many, and when even distinguished authority can be cited in favor of "beating" the Constitution, as corporations evade the statute law. We feel so secure in possession of our institutions that it is useful to appreciate occasionally the depth of sentiment in support of the bases of our Government felt by those who have defended them against assault all but fatal. Douglas was pre-eminently such a man. His life spanned the controversial epoch before the civil war, and whoever understands his career has the key to the most disputed points of our constitutional development. Prof. Johnson has done well his part of the work necessary to untangle the legal snarls regarding the status of slavery under the Constitution, and the permission or prohibition of it in territory brought within the United States. His style is clear and pleasant, and he quotes so freely from his authorities, naming them so numerously, that his book* will be one of authority.

But many will find the study of the man as interesting as the details of the check to slavery which precipitated the war. Douglas was a curious compound of contradictions. An Eastern man, yet a Senator from the West; a Northern politician, yet the husband of a wife from a slave-owning family; a Protestant, and yet devotedly attached to his second wife, a Catholic, when religious prejudice was strong; a Democrat, and yet a stanch supporter of the Republican who defeated him—his life was a strange compound of conflicting influences. It is customary to think of him as overshadowed by Lincoln, and yet up to the time of Lincoln's election as President Douglas overshadowed Lincoln. It is hopeless to reverse an estimate which, after all, is not so much an appraisal of the two men as an impression gained from events which both opened Lincoln's career and closed Douglas's. Yet Lincoln's fame is so great and imperishable that Douglas's memory should not be grudged the truth—that he narrowly missed reaching Lincoln's place, and would have creditably filled it. It was the division of the opposition which elected Lincoln, yet despite the division of votes which might have been his Douglas polled within a half-million as many as Lincoln. Had he polled his party vote as fully as he deserved it, history would have been written differently.

That he, too, would have shown himself an able patriot cannot be doubted of a man who had the greatness of soul to support so stoutly the man who had defeated his dearest ambition. Had Douglas been less generous he might have reminded Lincoln that events had taken the course which Douglas had forecast, but of resentment and disappointment he showed no trace, having won that self-victory which was so marked a characteristic of Lincoln. His plea for the Union at the capital of Illinois did much to explain his State's splendid loyalty, and surpassed anything he did in the great joint debate with Lincoln. Of this effort it was no friend of his who said: "I do not think it is possible for a human being to produce a more prodigious effect with spoken words." The account in detail of this incident is but one of many passages which dwarf our present disputes over railway regulation and nine-hour laws, and whether or not unions are trusts. There were giants in those days, there was dignity in their issues, and there is interest in this life for any who have the imagination, with Prof. Johnson's help, to recreate those times.

*STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS: A STUDY IN AMERICAN POLITICS. By Allen Johnson, Professor of History in Bowdoin College. New York: The Macmillan Company. Pp. 503. $2.50.

SPENCER'S HUMAN SIDE.

(Concluded.)

As for his system of philosophy, the critics are already demolishing it, as a system. His abstract reasoning was frequently at fault. But he was a tremendous power in the world of thought. He smoothed the course of learning. Not a man of richly varied attainments by any means, or one whose views on all subjects were of equal value, he was nevertheless a profound thinker, an original force, and it is the chief merit of this book that it displays all his traits in the just proportion.

The book is admirably made, and the illustrations, including many portraits, are as good as possible. The index is a model of its kind, complete, correct, and well arranged, and that is much nowadays.

FOR HAMMOCK OR STEAMER CHAIR.

THE fluffy young Stanlaws person, all frills and filmy lace and furbelows, who adorns the various illustrated pages of "The Adventures of Charles Edward," (Little, Brown & Co., $1.50,) is characteristic of the spirit of the book, which is of the airily graceful sort, to be read in hammock or steamer chair.

Each of the adventures occupies a chapter, and each is independent of the others, though Charles Edward himself and his titled wife, Lady Angela Austin, are hero and heroine, respectively, of the experiences narrated.

Being parties to a most unusual union, in which the wealthy American man espoused the titled English girl, (a subversion of precedent sufficiently remarkable to occasion comment,) they were happy under the arrangement and lived to have many experiences, which a common sense of humor on their part enabled them to enjoy to the full.

When Charles Edward was not having his joke on Lady Angela she was having one on him, or, as was not unusual, they were mutually engaged in playing pranks on others. Being immensely wealthy and with irreproachable social position, they were likewise in a position to do much good for deserving persons less fortunate than themselves.

Charles Edward, with no business of his own, had a positive genius for meddling in the affairs of others. There was, for example, the case of the famous but unidentified author, Stefen Locke, who came into sudden fame through the publication, at one and the same time, of four distinct novels, and who, it now develops, was a syndicate of unknowns whose works were published by arrangement and under guarantee by Charles Edward. When fame came to the fictitious author each of the contributory members of the quartet insisted that it was his or her individual work that had brought the result. Whereupon Charles Edward's philanthropic spirit, as in other cases, was in danger of wreck on the rock of Ego and personal selfishness.

Charles Edward being a person of monumental nerve and his wife a woman of beauty and tact, all the adventures perforce end gayly.

The book is breezy and entertaining, and will serve its purpose, which, we take it, is to provide an hour or two of relaxation on days when the mercury climbs high.

AN OUT-OF-DOOR BOOK.

There is always something refreshing in an out-of-door novel, one which concerns itself intimately with forests and hills and torrents, and in which the importance of the characters is subordinated to that of the elements. "The Heart of the Red Firs," by Ada Woodruff Anderson, (Little, Brown & Co.,) deals with the great Pacific Northwest and the Nisqually Trail, and is written very vigorously and authoritatively. Undoubtedly the author knows the country and its people well—the pioneers, the half-breeds, and the rest. She is at her best in her clear, forceful picturing of the life there on the Puget Sound and in the fir woods; the characterization and her plot are alike inferior. The "story part," as the children say, lags often, and, indeed, does not seem to have been conceived in the first place with any marked conviction or originality.

But the shelving granite precipices showered with the spray of the Nisqually torrent, the wood trails leading through bogs and thickets are edged with "Indian paint-brush" and snapdragon, the Northern forest night with its bats and white owls and distant avalanches—these things are well and vividly described with the enthusiastic minuteness of one who loves her subject and can speak as one having authority.

FACT AND FANCY ABOUT CLIMATE

Prof. Ward in His New Book Discusses Various Popular Notions Regarding the Weather.

AS popular misconceptions of variations in the weather are frequent and abiding, Prof. Ward has rendered the public a service in producing a book* on climate which "can be read by an intelligent person who has not had special or extended training in the technicalities of the science." Such a reader will be apt to throw some of his cherished beliefs to the winds, though they may have some basis in facts otherwise to be explained. For example, he may have concluded, from his own recollection, that the Spring season has become permanently late and cool; that the Winters are milder, or that in his part of the country the rainfall has become heavier. Facts about the later or earlier ripening of cereals and fruits may deepen his impression. Trips twenty years apart to a French province may disclose that, "owing to change in climate," a certain grape or olive is no longer cultivated there. He may have read travelers' accounts about Central Asia gradually drying up. Rossikoff says the surface of lakes on the north side of the Caucasus are falling; Muschketoff records cases of dessication in Turkestan; Gautier finds traces of a former population in a region bordering the Sahara Desert, and historians have ascribed the decay of the Grecian and Syrian nations to decreases in the rainfall. This and like testimony Prof. Ward quashes in summary fashion.

> Accurate instruments, properly exposed and carefully read, do not lie, do not forget, are not prejudiced. When such instrumental records, scattered though they are, and difficult as it is to draw general conclusions from them, are carefully examined from the time when they were first kept, which in a few cases goes back about 150 years, there is found no evidence of any progressive change in temperature, or in the amount of rain and snow.

Idiosyncratic beliefs in progressive climatic changes are due to a too absolute trust in one's memory or to a tendency to exaggerate extraordinary events, which, looked back upon, group close like telegraph poles along a railroad track; or to a change of residence from the country to the warmer city, or from the coast to the interior. Persons who "can prove" their contentions by their own thermometer and rain gauge readings kept for years, forget that they may have exposed the instruments at different angles and locations.

But if no progressive change in our own climate is noticeable, as Prof. Ward asserts, "from the time of the landing of the earliest Pilgrim on the inhospitable shores of New England," there have been discovered extremely important long and short climatic "oscillations" over large areas. There is a three-year period and a distinct eleven-year periodicity in the magnetic phenomena of the earth, accompanied by definite fluctuations in temperature and rainfall. The variations in temperature during the eleven-year oscillations are slight, differing between the "sunspot minimum" and "sunspot maximum" but 1.3 degrees in the tropics and somewhat less than 1 degree in the extra-tropics. Sir Norman Lockyer declares that the magnetic and atmospheric changes in the sun are "the instigators of the terrestrial variations." But, although Meldrum calls attention to the sunspot periodicity of rainfall and tropical cyclones in the South Indian Ocean, and Poëy finds a like relation in the frequency of West Indian hurricanes, and Hill in the Summer monsoon rains of India, the modifications of the eleven-year cycle are still too obscure to forecast with certainty the character, whether wet or dry, of a coming year.

Prof. Brueckner of Berne ascertained a longer thirty-five-year oscillation in climate, also due to solar activity, which accounts, among other things, for the changes in the level of the Caspian Sea. This average swing of the weather pendulum may be prolonged to fifty years or shortened to twenty, but it has been determined with tolerable certainty from records dating as far back at 1000 A. D. In Western Siberia twice as much rain has fallen in the "wet" as in the succeeding "dry" cycle. In the years of minimum precipitation whole peoples may be forced to migrate from their towns and agricultural districts. The well-remembered "boom" in Western Kansas and Nebraska and Eastern Colorado in the decade from 1880 to 1890, at the end of a Brueckner "wet" cycle, was followed by disastrous years of drought, to which a period with somewhat increased rainfall and immensely better crops has now succeeded. This wetter cycle is prevalent in the United States, and should prevail for some years to come. Of course, the dry period that will follow may be forefended by a choice of cereals and other crops adapted to conditions of drought, the establishment of irrigation in districts most affected, and so on.

Prof. Ward's discussion of climatic periodicity presents but one aspect of a complete body of authentic facts about the climate, set forth lucidly and in orderly fashion. Here is information, not generally known, concerning the influence of weather and climate upon some of the more important diseases. The professor selects typical illustrations of the life of man in the tropics, in the temperate zones, and in the polar zones, giving adequate emphasis to the climatic factor. He classifies the zones, summarizes the types of climate as acted upon by conditions of land and water and altitude, and outlines vividly—and without tabular matter—the climatic characteristics in all latitudes. His introduction contains original matter, and gives the gist of the more important chapters of Dr. Julius Hann's "Handbuch der Klimatologie," which is the "standard work of its kind in the world." Of this work Dr. Ward published the English translation in 1903. His new volume is a fit supplement to Hann's, presenting clearly and reducing to its simplest terms a subject over which first-hand knowledge and research and a cumulative experience in teaching have given him the mastery.

THE ENGLISH HALF-SMART SET

PRESENTED with no other hint as to the author's indentity than the publisher's announcement that he or she is "well known," and that his or her books "have sold many large editions"—which is a queer locution if one stops to think about it—"The Half-Smart Set" (the Frederick A. Stokes Company), gains a sort of extrinsic interest by exciting curiosity as to who the well-known one can be. And it needs all the help it can get, in this or any other way, if the author's successes of the past are to be repeated. The story, however, is not half bad, for it deals with a group of people that have occasional moments of being really alive, and their emotional adventures are not the less credible in that they are something less than desperately tragical.

The scene is England, except for the inevitable trip to the Riviera. The hero, son of a Yorkshire attorney properly harsh and narrow, falls in with a family of the newly rich, addicted to automobiles and similar vices, and, after a brief courtship of its youngest daughter, rashly elopes with her. She has all the qualification for making herself disliked and suspected by the Yorkshire relatives, and proceeds to do it. The conflict of London and provincial standards, social and moral, takes its natural course, with assorted unhappiness, squabbles, and misunderstandings for all concerned, but at last the town wife emerges spotless and triumphant from the compromising situations created for her by an ex-admirer during her husband's absence in Russia on law business, and after the near-villain falls in love with the hero's least trying sister the tale ends with everybody's troubles presumably over.

TWO NOVELIZED PLAYS.

The growing popularity of the "novelized play" has brought a surprising number of these hybrids into the market. One of the most recent is "The Round Up," novelized by John Murray and Miles Miller from the melodrama by Edmund Day, (the G. W. Dillingham Company.) Like most of these inverted forms of literary development, it is most convincing in the passages taken directly from the play. The "novelizers" have done their work well, but those portions which form the cement holding the dialogue together seem sometimes a bit labored.

It is decidedly a stirring tale, abounding in thrills—fights and famine, torture and deceit, love and vengeance. What more could the most exacting sensationalist desire? The character of Echo Allen, with its curious inconsistencies of sentiment, is perhaps less comprehensible in the book than on the stage, but the task of taking a person out of a play and putting him or her into a novel is one fraught with many difficulties. This particular obstacle has been overcome more successfully in "The Chorus Lady," published by the same firm.

Dear Patsy O'Brien, in James Forbes's play, won a vast number of hearts, and in John W. Harding's novelization she has lost surprisingly little of her charm. She talks fearful and wonderful slang and fluffs up her yellow pompadour and exhibits her bargains to the girls in the theatre just as she did on the stage. And she makes her sacrifices just as sturdily and nonchalantly as ever. It would be absurd to pretend that the book is as delightful as the play, but it is a creditable and interesting discharge of a difficult task, and is perhaps the best of recent novelizations.

MODERN HUMOR IN LORIMER BOOK

"Jack Spurlock—Prodigal" an Excellent Story of Unique Adventure Told in Sprightly Fashion.

WHILE there is little, or at any rate not much, likelihood that "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal,"* will repeat the enormous success as a "best seller" of Mr. Lorimer's not yet quite forgotten "Letters from a Self-Made Merchant to His Son," it will, nevertheless, be read with appreciative interest and amusement by a good many people. Like its predecessor, it has for foundation idea the contrast between a boy who has been allowed to assume that money is to be had for the asking in limitless quantities and a father who expects that boy on quitting college instantly to settle down into the business strenuosity by which the fortune which he has been treating as a gift of nature was attained. In this case, however, "the Governor" has made his money by the promoting of trusts and the wrecking of railways, and, therefore, he cannot, as did old Graham, preach industry, honesty, and the practical with the same effect. In other words, the later book will not appeal as strongly to those who are grateful for a whimsical and humorous presentation of moral and commercial platitudes, though it contains not a little of just this thing, but it will have to depend for the most part upon the approval of those who do not demand too much of possibility from a lively and well-told story of adventure amid extremely modern conditions.

Lively and well told "Jack Spurlock, Prodigal" certainly is, and the fact that most of its characters are near relatives of Mrs. Harris does not, or at least need not, detract much from the other fact that they are all plausible enough for the considerate novel reader who is ready to accept conventionalized personages in fiction exactly as conventionalized forms are accepted in the other arts—for what they are worth, that is, and they are worth a good deal. The book is delightfully or dreadfully slangy, just as one chooses to look at it, but those who admit that slang is a legitimate part of living language will have no fault to find with Mr. Lorimer's use of what is, after all, only one variety of metaphor. How much of his slang is in actual circulation and how much he invents is a question of no particular importance, since it is all vitalized and comprehensible and lends itself with delightful facility to the accomplishment of legitimate purposes. Hardly a page of the book lacks two or three quotable and rememberable phrases, and not infrequently they have the veiled truth and seriousness which are always the substance of real humor.

Quite the best character in the book, perhaps, is Major Jackson, a Southerner, who never lived anywhere except on the stage, but none the less a thoroughly harmonious and consistent embodiment of venerable traditions. He drinks and he gambles, and his code of honor is distinctly barbaric, and in money matters he does things that in a New Englander would be swindling, if not outright robbery, and yet he is a pleasing and sympathetic old ruffian, who draws the line at meanness as he sees it, and makes harsh judgment impossible by carrying courage and generosity to fantastic, but not exactly ridiculous, lengths. He and Jack prove curiously congenial, because Jack has what it is necessary to hope are the redeeming virtues in time to be developed among the sons of huge wealth speedily acquired, and the two go through some crazy adventures in New York and Maryland. One cannot believe that anything of the kind ever happened, or could happen, but it is very distinctly funny, and the happy phrase, the neat epigram, or the jest in earnest, invariably arrive at the moment when credulity threatens to grow tired.

The climax and triumph of the book, the part that makes it much more than worth while and worth reading, deals with two big houses down on Long Island—one of them the home of the newest of new families, and the other where people equally rich, but thoroughly civilized, show the difference between two stages of human progress. Of course the note is forced in both cases, but none the less are these chapters real marvels of observation and characterization. The Corlisses and the Bonsalls will be identified a dozen times by those who know the region, for it has precisely such inhabitants and precisely such houses. Mr. Lorimer treats the Bonsalls with a ferocity that is none the less cruel because it is hilarious, but nobody, except, perhaps, the Bonsalls themselves, will deny that he tells the truth about them. Incidentally, however, he falls into a queer mistake—a mistake which shows that while Mr. Lorimer may know a good deal about gambling in general, he is yet to learn the first principles of poker. At the close of a little game between Jack, the Major, and the son of the house of Bonsall, the latter counts his chips and announces to Jack, "These call for eighty-three bones from the Major and fifty-six from you." That is a case where sophisticated readers will laugh at Mr. Lorimer instead of with him.

NEW BRITISH ADVENTURER.

YOUNG LORD STRANLEIGH. By Robert Barr. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $1.50. Pp. 313.

THIS tale strikes a new note in novels of adventure. It has a new sort of hero, a drawling British dandy, who beats a hard bargainer of the "City"—or as we say of Wall Street—at his own game, and by force of native wit or canniness, defeats the murderous and thievish intent of "bad" men of various sorts on land and sea. Lord Stranleigh is a British peer who has too much money to have much interest in life. To him comes Mackeller, a Kiplingesque sort of engineer, whose mine is about to be taken from him by Lawsonian methods. It is a tremendously rich property, but the price has been smashed down by tricks of stock gamblers offering more than the market can absorb. Instead of buying in the open market, Stranleigh sends twenty buyers into twenty separate sellers' offices at the same instant, taking all each will sell at his own price. The market thus becomes overbought, instead of oversold, the scattered sellers having sold more shares than there are in existence. The baffled principal market rigger then determines to recoup his losses by robbing the mine of its richest ore before his term as the mine's manager expires, for although the shares are deliverable forthwith, it is months before the old administration can be turned out. Mackeller is all for foiling these plans with fists and firearms. But Stranleigh shows him tricks enough to make his brawn and simple common sense seem foolish. With his turbine yacht Stranleigh beats the thieves to the mine, watches them dig his ore, which they intended to steal. Their labor leads it into the steamer they had chartered, but which Stranleigh had bought from its former owners after it had sailed on its felonious errand.

With his title to the ship it is a simple matter to change Captains, and he thus gets his own ore mined at the expense of the thieves. Every few pages Mackeller wants to brusque it, and Stranleigh, with his drawl, always shows him a better way. His steamer load of gold arrives in London just as the Bank of England is in difficulties owing to a stupid statute requiring it to accumulate a reserve of $500,000,000, in which it is obstructed by Wall Street. There is a panic in the "City," and Stranleigh seeks an interview with the Governor of the Bank, who finds Stranleigh's innocence of worldly wiles in general, and the ways of financiers in particular, too irritating for words. But Stranleigh turns over a thousand tons of gold "on a special train"—as we figure it, this would require more cars than ever followed any British locomotive, but no matter—and saves the Bank of England. There may be hardened story readers who can absorb this yarn by installments, but most readers will do better not to tackle it until they can read it through at a sitting. They will want to, for it is easy, pleasant, and, at times, thrilling, reading. Withal it carries a budget of useful morals—that soft hands do not always mean a soft head, that something more is necessary to success than even strength and honesty combined, and that wicked men constantly go in perils of which they wot little, making honesty the best policy still even in these modern times.

THE ETHICAL TEACHING OF BUDDHA.

The layman who wishes to get a clear idea of the ethical teaching of Buddha, apart from his philosophy, will find a concise and illuminating discussion and interpretation of "The Creed of Buddha," (the John Lane Company, $1.50,) by the same anonymous author who wrote, upon a similar plan, "The Creed of Christ." In addition to the several chapters in which the author sets forth and discusses the teachings of Buddha, he enters into a comparison of the viewpoints of the East and the West, and shows why it is so difficult for each to understand the other and so necessary for the West to cast aside many of its ingrained habits of mind if it would come to a full understanding of Eastern ideas. In another chapter he discusses "the bankruptcy of Western thought," by which he means that the higher thought of the Western world has come to a point where it no longer has anything to offer in response to its own demands. In the final chapter he sets forward the theory that it remains for Western intellect to borrow and assimilate the ethical ideas of the East and evolve from these "a science of the soul" that will enrich the Western poverty of thought.

RELIGION AND MEDICINE

BY

ELWOOD WORCESTER, D.D., Ph.D.; SAMUEL McCOMB, M.A., D.D., and ISADOR H. CORIAT, M.D.

THIS book illustrates how an alliance between the highest neurological science of our time and the Christian religion in its primitive and simplest form, as modern Biblical scholarship has disclosed it, may become a powerful weapon with which to attack the causes that lie behind the neurotic and hysterical temperament that characterizes the life of to-day.

AMERICAN LIFE IN NEW FICTION

Work of Novelists Abounds in Pictures of Local Conditions—All Sections Represented.

HERE is a panorama of the United States and her people. It is made by the fiction writers of the country. These painters of the pen have sought for their scenes and their themes North and South and East and West, and have filled their pages with pictures of local color and delineations of local character and conditions in city and village and country until there is scarcely a corner left anywhere which has not been made the scene of some novel. It is not too much to say that out of the American novels of the last five years could be selected a group of books which would paint the entire country, its scenery, its people, its social and economic conditions, from Key West to Nome and from Bangor to the Philippines. Even in the short space of the last few weeks they have done very well at this business, as will be evident from the following paragraphs. New England, New York, the West and the South, each is made by the novelists to contribute something of its own character to the mighty portrait they are drawing.

George S. Wasson begins the picture with his stories of the fishermen of the New England Coast, "Home from Sea," (Houghton, Mifflin & Co, $1.50.) The stories, of which there are ten, most of them having had previous magazine publication, deal with the men of "Killick Cove"—that same nook of the New England coast with which the readers of Mr. Wasson's former books are familiar. They are unique among the American people, these deep-sea fishermen, with their salt-sea flavor, their reckless courage, and their superstition, and Mr. Wasson is doing a distinct service in preserving so faithfully a type of men rapidly disappearing, to be found nowhere else in the country. Mr. Wasson, who was a painter before he was an author, has provided some exceptionally good illustrations from pen and ink drawings of his own.

Opening in Canada, then passing over into the Adirondack region, "Kendar Kross: a Tale of the North Country," by J. Van der veer Shurts, (Richard G. Badger, Boston,) tells a complicated story of attempted wrong that runs through two generations. Many varied scenes of life in the Adirondack region, from the adventures of runaway slaves to a race with death in the pack of pursuing wolves, bring the story, which is written with a good deal of vigor and works out a tangled plot with much incident, down to modern times. Most of the scenes are laid in and around a beautiful home in the Adirondacks, whose name gives to the story its title.

Life in the open and many exciting episodes in the hunting of big game have given George Selwyn Kimball the material for a galloping story, "The Lackawannas at Moosehead," (The Ball Publishing Company, Boston, $1.08.) It tells of the gay doings of a party of college boys who, with the help of two guides, have no end of a good time and an equal amount of fun while camping at Moosehead in the woods of Maine.

The scene of "Gift Bearers," by Henry Berman, (The Grafton Press, New York, $1.50,) is laid in Philadelphia, although there is no effort to portray local color. It is a psychological novel, of the extremest type, and is occupied entirely with the attitude of its chief character toward certain crises of life. But the class whom that character typifies is so distinctively a part of modern American life that the story deserves its place in any list of books that picture social conditions in the United States. The heroine is one of those exceptional women, well endowed both physically and mentally, cultured and refined, but already embarked upon spinsterhood, who are familiar figures in every large city. The book recounts two episodes in the life of a woman past 30, wherein she is sought in marriage and each time gives her promise, only to send the man away after a little because either he or her own feeling had fallen below her ideal. The story, which is written with notable cleverness, turns inside out, mainly by means of conversation, the thoughts and feelings of all its half dozen characters.

New York City and a score of phases of its varied life, as seen through the eyes of Shorty McCabe and reported in his audacious and picturesque language, furnish Sewell Ford with the material for "Side-Stepping with Shorty," (Mitchell Kennerley, New York, $1.50.) It carries on the theme with which Mr. Ford won some attention last year in "Shorty McCabe." As a professor of physical culture and a trainer-down, and also a "trimmer" of millionaires, Shorty sees a good deal of life and tells about it with a zest and an unconventionality of expression that make his stories as breezy as the sidewalks round about The Times Building on a windy day.

"The Maker of Joys," in Frank Waller Allen's dainty booklet, (The Greyfriars' Shop, Kansas City,) is the pastor of a great church in New York, to whom a burlesque actress, without knowing it, preaches a sermon of which he happens at just that moment to be much in need. A detective story, "In the Dead of Night," by J. T. McIntyre, (The J. B. Lippincott Company,) although it is brimful of mystery and adventure, yet contrives to color its weird happenings with much of the seeming of the night life of New York City's streets. Its mysterious and thrilling adventures begin with the first chapter, in which the hero is carried off in a cab by a pretty girl under the apparent conviction that he is some one else. Then exciting and bewildering events follow in rapid succession, until finally the hero succeeds in unraveling the web. "Fritzi," by Agnes McClelland Daulton, (The Century Company, $1.50,) is intended primarily for young readers, but is written with such tenderness and with such knowledge of human nature of all ages that it will appeal to their elders quite as much as to the youthful members of the family. Fritzi is a little girl who assists the proprietor of a bird show in a vaudeville theatre and finds a home with whomsoever will take care of her, until finally she is taken into a delightful family who have a pleasant home on Staten Island. And finally the search for her father, from whom she had been lost in a street accident in her infancy, is successful.

Among the pictures of Southern life Eleanor Talbot Kinkead has a vividly told love story, "The Courage of Blackburn Blair," (Moffat, Yard & Co., $1.50,) which deals with life in Kentucky at the time of the Goebel tragedy. The scene is laid in the bluegrass region, in and about the town of Lexington. There is an interesting portrayal of the state of public feeling before and after the shooting of Gov. Goebel, with which and the succeeding incidents the love story is closely intertwined.

Turning toward the West, Margaret Potter's "The Golden Ladder," (Harper & Brothers, $1.50,) is an earnest, detailed study of life, of which the scene of the first half is laid in Chicago, after which the movement changes to New York. It follows the career of a young man from a Wisconsin farm from the time of his appearance in a Dearborn Avenue boarding house, step by step, toward financial success, until at the end he reaches the summit of the Golden Ladder—and has nothing else. The story, which is unusually long for an American novel, shows much familiarity with the ways and doings of the financial world, dramatic instinct in the development of plot and the handling of situations, and much cleverness in the art of words. But it betrays a lack of knowledge of real men and women. Most of the characters are crude in conception and are not made credible in development. The author is given also to sweeping, cynical generalizations that are youthful enough to be amusing. But the seriousness of her attitude toward the art of fiction and its relation to life can very well redeem many faults. A different sort of Western book is "Folks Back Home," (The McClure Company, $1.50,) a collection of short stories, vivacious and veracious, by Eugene Wood, about people in Minuca Centre, Ohio. They show a keen appreciation of the common sense, and the strong individuality of the people of the Western country town.

The region of the plains and the life of the cowboy and the frontier Sheriff furnish the material for Clarence Mulford's "The Orphan," (The Outing Publishing Company, $1.50.) Mr. Mulford proved last year his thorough knowledge of subjects of that sort and his ability to write about them with vigor and truth and the grim humor they demand in his "Bar—20." His present story is about a young fellow who at the beginning is practically an outlaw, with every man's hand against him. The indignant inhabitants of the region declare that the Orphan is a mongrel, but the author starts in fair by explaining that he "was white, his profanity blue, and his anger red." The story has its origin in the fact that the Orphan had just "made a mess of two sheepherders," whereupon the Sheriff of the county rode forth alone to war. The rest of the tale recounts how the outlaw, by degrees and by various means and happenings, was changed from a killing machine into an ordinary man. The book is as virile as the life it describes.

Alfred Henry Lewis has a new series of Southwestern tales in "Wolfville Folks," (D. Appleton & Co., $1.50,) the several stories of which have already had magazine publication. One meets here many of the characters already familiar in Mr. Lewis's other Wolfville books—the Old Cattleman, Doc Peets, Cherokee Hall, and all the other prominent citizens of the Arizona town whose chronicler this author has become. It goes without saying that they are quaint and amusing and erratic in speech and deed. But as veracious types of the Southwestern country they are preposterous. To the inhabitant of the Eastern seaboard, who has never been further West than the District of Columbia, their very outlandishness makes them seem convincing. But they are much more interesting and amusing than if they and their purely imaginary dialect were true to life.

A good story of army life in Arizona in the days when Geronimo was on the warpath is told by John Lloyd in "The Captain's Wife," (Mitchell Kennerley, $1.50.) Tombstone and Fort Cochise are the scenes of his drama and its characters are army officers and the women of their households, enlisted men, and a few mine and ranch owners. The author evidently knows thoroughly the country, the people, and the life of which he writes. The glare of the Arizona sunshine and the heat of the Arizona desert are in his pages. The army men and the life of the post are delineated with a lifelikeness that shows both knowledge and skill. The plot, though not very intricate, is well contrived, involving a lapse of memory, caused by illness, in which the Captain's wife forgets her secret marriage and marries another, while the perils of the time and the fights with the savages afford plenty of exciting incident.

A unique literary venture comes from Seattle, bearing the title "Tillicum Tales," with the Seattle Writers' Club as both author and publisher. It comprises a collection of twenty stories, written by as many different members of the club, all of them women. The authors are all contributors to the monthly magazines and several have published one or more books. Most of the stories tell tales of life in various parts of the Pacific Coast and show a good deal of local color.

THE TRIUMPH OF THE NORMAL.

The book mart is full of literature dealing with the everlasting struggle between the sensuous and the ascetic, between the flesh and the spirit, between nature and the supernatural. This struggle takes diverse forms, and is expressed by the authors in varied ways. The psychical drama suggested by the problem is built up along so many different lines in this sort of book that there are often only occasional signposts to show that it is the same old, well-worn theme, the war between the real and the ideal. In some books lately published the Soul has gone down under the clamorous onslaught of Sense; in others the very lifeblood of the tale has been drained in its evolution, leaving the work pallid and austere—an exemplification of the Conquest of the Body by the Spirit.

In "The Vigil," by Harold Begbie, (Dodd, Mead & Co.,) we find the eternal battle, but this time with a variation. Mr. Begbie is able to differentiate and make distinctions with a fine sense of balance. He draws delicate lines and creates his situations with subtlety. In his hands the struggle becomes not one between the senses and the soul, but between the normal and the abnormal. The abnormal is represented by the idealistic, ascetic clergyman, Rodwell, bound tightly by his mediaeval belief in celibacy as the highest good, who goes to a graceless little manufacturing town to preach the Gospel—earnestly but without the illumination of the heart. The normal element is incarnated in the character of the woman who loves him; she is a patient, high-souled, steadfast creature, with a human pulse in her veins and a profound confidence in his eventual reformation. The term reformation is used advisedly, for in Rodwell's awakening to the warmer, saner, and sweeter uses of a religion that goes hand in hand with human life we have all the sense of a genuine conversion.

Mr. Begbie has given us a very good piece of religious fiction, which should be interesting to persons of all creeds.

TALES FROM COTTON LAND.

This little book, "De Namin' ob de Twins and Other Sketches from the Cotton Land," by Mary Fairfax Childs, (B. W. Dodge & Co.,) which takes its name from one of the more humorous of the negro poems which it contains, embraces a sentiment so tender as to endow it with altogether a rare and charming quality. This sentiment is the childlike love and adoration of the old-time negro for his master and mistress—a sentiment not to be sundered by the breaking of the bonds of slavery, the sad recollection of those happy days on the old plantation, when the negro, slave though he was, had no need to worry for the morrow.

The stories are told some in verse and some in prose, according to the subjects and the natural fitness of things. A fine example of the more pathetic dialect verse is to be found in "Marse Linkum's Mistek," wherein an old servant explains how it was that the great President made an error in "a settin' old folks free." Something a bit more dramatic is attained in a war poem, picturing an old negro servant returning to his master to announce the death of the "young master" whom he had followed faithfully to battle—and whom he had buried with his own hands.

Though many of the humorous bits are put in verse, perhaps the most laughable are such of the prose stories as "De Fambly Tree." In all the various kinds of verse one brief love song is included.

GETTYSBURG WAS BLUNDERED INTO

Col. John S. Mosby Blames A. P. Hill and Heth for Deranging Lee's Plans—An Exoneration.

COL. JOHN S. MOSBY, C. S. A., the famous leader of irregular cavalry who contributed so largely to the unhappiness of the Federal authorities at Washington during the war between the States, North and South, is a man whose first-hand knowledge of affairs at a critical period entitles him to a respectful hearing. His story of his own remarkable operations—of what a supreme audacity and a perfect knowledge of the country enabled him to do with a mere handful of men in the face of overwhelming numbers—of the swift movements which made his name a terror to stay-at-home loyal citizens and his activities the preoccupation of the War Office—of these things he has written already. In the present volume, "Stuart's Cavalry in the Gettysburg Campaign," (Moffat, Yard & Co.,) Col. Mosby undertakes the task of clearing the name of his admired commander, the Chief of Cavalry of the Army of Northern Virginia, of certain reflections cast upon it in the writings of some of Gen. Lee's staff officers—notably Gen. Long, his Military Secretary, and Cols. Marshall and Taylor—and in letters of Gen. Heth, who was in command of one of Gen. A. P. Hill's divisions at Gettysburg, and (with Gen. Hill) began the battle.

These officers have sought to show that the failure to defeat Meade in Pennsylvania was the result of the unwarranted absence of Gen. Stuart and his cavalry. Col. Mosby, as Gen. Stuart's champion—though perhaps that gallant officer really needs no champion—assembles authorities and marshals arguments (which seem fairly conclusive to the layman) to show—first, that Stuart's absence was due to the simple circumstance that he was carrying out Lee's orders elsewhere, and, second, that the engagement planned by Gen. Lee to take place at Cashtown Pass, "a point of concentration which nature had made impregnable," was shifted to the field of Gettysburg, eight miles away, by the adventurous precipitancy of Hill and Heth.

"Heth," Col. Mosby writes, "says he stumbled into the fight; he ought to have said he blundered into it. He says that had the cavalry been in position, Gen. Lee would have known of Reynolds's approach to Gettysburg and would have occupied the place and made it impregnable. But the absence of cavalry (if they had no cavalry) was no reason for Heth's going there on a raid; it might have been a good reason for his staying in camp. This statement assumes that Gettysburg was Lee's objective; it was not. Lee was as willing for Meade to be at Gettysburg as anywhere else; he had no idea of going there before he heard the firing; he went to the rescue of A. P. Hill and Heth."

According to Col. Mosby this "raid" to Gettysburg, which it has been sometimes said was undertaken in order to get shoes for the barefoot soldiery, became suddenly in official language "a reconnaissance in force" when the "raiders" found themselves involved with superior forces and badly cut up. They "felt the enemy," and he was there. Mosby resents the putting of the blame upon Stuart by the very men whom he considers the real culprits. He shows plainly enough why Stuart was absent in person on the first day of the battle—produces the orders under which his chief was acting—and he further seeks to show that since Stuart was keeping a large portion of the enemy's cavalry busy elsewhere, there was really no lack of cavalry with Lee's army. He quotes Pleasanton, the Federal cavalry General, as writing from Gettysburg on June 29 to Gen. Buford, "the road is terribly infested with prowling cavalry parties," while Buford in a letter to Pleasanton the next day repeats almost the same phrase. "The road to Cashtown," he writes, "is terribly infested with roving cavalry detachments." The Federals, at all events, did not observe any dearth of horse in the front. Therefore, "no one can show that the absence of a part of the cavalry with Stuart had anything to do either with bringing on or losing the battle." The cavalry, to be sure, was scouting with Cashtown as the point d'appui, not Gettysburg; but that was in accordance with the general plan.

In order to reach his conclusions Col. Mosby has to call attention to certain points in which Gen. Lee's two reports of the battle, one earlier and one later, do not agree. He assumes, with what warrant the reader may estimate for himself, that Lee signed without reading one of these reports, which embodies (and therefore tends to confirm) the statements made in the reports of Gens. Hill and Heth as to the nature of their operations.

The truth probably is that Gen. Lee, as usual, (when it was too late to mend matters,) shouldered the mistakes of his subordinates. The rashness of Hill or Heth, (or both) which drew on the fighting from Cashtown to Gettysburg had done its work, and the not unnatural disposition of these officers to explain the failure which resulted from that rashness by the absence of the cavalry, which was with Stuart, did not really reflect on Stuart, who, as Col. Mosby shows, was following out orders transmitted to him by Gen. Lee himself through Gen. Longstreet. Col. Mosby is, of course, a partisan; he had newspaper controversies with Heth over the same matter, but his account is interesting, it brings out neglected aspects of the famous battle which marked the turning point of the war, and it seems to put one fact at least beyond reasonable doubt—viz., that the place selected by Gen. Lee as the point of concentration for his army was Cashtown; that Gettysburg, so far as the commanding General was concerned, was an accident. This point, like the rest of Col. Mosby's contentions, is fortified by quotations from many reports of both armies, and corroborated by private letters from officers still living or very recently dead.

In so far as the book is a narrative of the military movements of the war, the period covered by it is that which extends from the battle of Chancellorsville at the point where Stuart took the place of the fallen Jackson, to the retreat from Gettysburg. This narrative, however, is neither complete nor consecutive. The book is polemical.

CONCERNING PARENTS AND CHILDREN.

"It is a wise parent that knows its own child" might serve as an excellent motto for this book. That knowledge at the outset would save many mistakes and much future unhappiness. It is an accompaniment of the understanding that all children are not alike, and that what is food and drink for one may be poison for another. Thus Mr. Ernest H. Abbott in "On the Training of Parents," (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.,) puts due stress on this point.

The book, as may be inferred, is actually concerned with the training of children. Its philosophy is based on the perfectly plausible proposition that to rule others one must have learned first to rule one's self.

The daily issues in child life are intelligently discussed and sympathetically analyzed with an abundance of illuminative detail in the form of actual experience. No one, we imagine, could read this book without gaining invaluable knowledge. It should be in the hand of every parent and teacher of the young. It provides not only a sensible and easily applied system of dealing with children, but has an added charm in many diverting stories of real child life. The tone is genial, and a vein of pleasant, sympathetic humor lightens every page.

Mr. Abbott's little book cannot be too heartily commended.

MORE DAVE PORTER ADVENTURES.

The young people who have followed with pleasure Edward Stratemeyer's tales of the life and adventures of Dave Porter at Oak Hall and in the South Seas will welcome the new volume in the series, "Dave Porter in the Far North," (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company, $1.25.) This book opens with Dave still at the boarding school, but deeply anxious to find the father and sister of whose existence he had learned in the previous volume. With a chum he goes across to England, where he believes his father to be, and then, in the latter's wake, on to Norway. The boys follow the expedition upon which Dave's father is engaged to the Far North and have no end of adventures of all imaginable sorts, in which their manly qualities finally enable them to come out triumphant and Dave to find his father just in time to save his life.

ANALYZING THE NOVEL.

IS there a theory of the art of novel writing? In view of the quality of most novels, taking them as they come in multitudes from the presses, we might be justified in asking if novel writing is an art. Yet we get many books from time to time on the technique of the novel, and we have always Flaubert's famous preface as a guide if we desire to take up the study. Mr. Henry James's new prefaces to his old stories are critical literature of the same kind. In analyzing anew his own novels he is clearly searching for a theory of the art of novel writing in their pages and in his ample if whimsical mind.

He dwells in the introduction to "The Awkward Age" (Volume IX. of the New York edition, Scribner) on the origin of the germ sunk in the "considerable mass" of that composition. He permits himself to marvel on "the quite incalculable tendency of a mere grain of subject matter to expand and develop and cover the ground when the conditions happen to favor it." We are led to infer that "The Awkward Age" was originally intended to be a thin book; it is a thick book, there are nearly 550 pages in the new edition. It is all the more regrettable that the book at first failed, and was treated with disrespect. It is, we learn now, a comedy, a humorous view of social life, and it was so carefully constructed that its author was able to give to his publishers beforehand a neat diagram, a central circle, representing "the situation," and a circle of circles around it representing "so many distinct lamps, as I liked to call them, the function of each of which would be to light with all due intensity one of its aspects."

Turning to Volume X. of the New York edition, which contains three short stories, "The Spoils of Poynton," "A London Life," and "The Chaperon," we find that the author also recalls distinctly the germinal origin of the first of these—a chance word in a dinner-table conversation that communicated the virus of suggestion. On the other hand, "A London Life" is simply another illustration of the international conflict of manners, "a general theme dealing for the most part with the bewilderment of the good American, of either sex and of almost any age, in the presence of the 'European' order." In "The Chaperon" we learn that both the picture and the anecdote figure, Mr. James's idea being that a short story has to chose between being either one or the other, and "can but play its part strictly according to its kind." He reflects, with comfort, that in "The Chaperon," on the whole, the picture ingeniously prevails.

Clearly Mr. James is too personal, too involved, generally too delightfully vague, in formulating his theory of fiction, to be of use to any but the most advanced student of the art, if there is such an art, and it has students. The virus of Jamesism must be communicated to one before he can begin to comprehend the manner in which the virus of suggestion, accidentally communicated to Mr. James, develops into the artistic entity of a novel or a short story. We must all admit that Mr. James's stories are artistic, but few of us will ever find leisure really to study their construction.

There is much matter more to our immediate purpose in the latest practical attempt to reduce novel writing to a theory—namely, "The Technique of the Novel: The Elements of the Art, Their Evolution and Present Use," (Harper & Brothers,) by Charles F. Horne of the Faculty of the City College. Mr. Horne's aim is, frankly, "to make clear the principles that underlie the most popular form of literature, the novel." The inference is that principles really underlie the form, and that one may find them, by searching, in "Peveril of the Peak," "David Copperfield," "The Scarlet Letter," and "The Rise of Silas Lapham," not to mention "Tristram Shandy," "Gryll Grange," "Margaret," and "Peter Ibbetson," which are also novels. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson and Prof. Walter Raleigh have written books to the same purpose as Mr. Horne's, but his idea is that a "completed textbook" on the subject is required in collegiate study nowadays, and he has attempted to produce one, which, to be sure, is only another of the interminable list of books about books.

Mr. Horne is very thorough in his discussion of the subject. In his first part, dealing with the origin of the novel, he has chapters on "The Beginnings of Story Building," "The Elements of the Novel," "The Egyptian Tales," "The Greek Romances," "The Mediaeval Conglomerates," and the "Modern Novel." The second part of the book treats of "The Development of the Modern Novel," with consideration of the plot, motive, character, emotion, background and style, and there is a concluding essay on the novels of incident, artifice, ordinary life, and "the inevitable." In his chapter on the "Elements of the Novel," he tabulates these elements as plot, motive or verisimilitude, character portrayal, emotional excitement, background and style, remarking that these six essentials differ not very widely from Aristotle's six parts of tragedy—fable, manners, diction, sentiments, stage decorations, and music. "Style corresponds to both diction and music. For stage decorations, the novel substitutes a background of description."

Anybody competent to write a novel, with a story to tell, the gift to tell it, the human sympathy to give it life, would know without the aid of a college course in the theory of fiction that the elements of a story included plot, character, motive, emotional lift, pictorial environment, and the manner of the telling, which is style. But he might reflect that some of the most esteemed novels have next to no plot, elusive motives, small play of emotion, while their personages are merely reflections of the author's own varying moods.

Mr. Horne is a zealous student himself, and he has performed his appointed task so well that we fear that some of his pupils will be encouraged to swell the number of hopeful novelists. But, in truth, the best preparation for writing a good novel is inborn power to do so. Nobody taught Defoe or Fielding.

LITERARY LONDON'S CURRENT GOSSIP

Two Tramp Books Interest the Metropolis—The Herbert Spencer Biography Is Also Important

LONDON, May 22.—Two rather remarkable books have lately been written about tramps. One is Mr. J. H. M. Abbott's "Letters from Queer Street," a work of fiction. The other is the life history of that extraordinary literary figure, Mr. W. H. Davies, and is obviously a work of fact. This latter is called "The Autobiography of a Super-Tramp," a title very probably suggested by Bernard Shaw, who has written an introduction to the book.

Mr. Davies's history is a most extraordinary one, and in the book for which Bernard Shaw has stood sponsor Mr. Davies recounts it with much frankness of detail. Mr. Davies is 35 years old, and ranks at the present time among the minor poets who matter. He is also distinguished by being the only poet whose possession of a wooden leg is a fact constantly thrust upon the public notice. The prominence given by Mr. Davies and his admirers to this misfortune is not, as it might be in the case of another man, an indication of bad taste, but is merely a manifestation of that very appealing frankness which has made the poet's autobiography so fascinating a volume.

Mr. Davies commences by telling us about his youth, spent humbly but comfortably in an English provincial town, and about how, when still a lad, he sailed for America. At Liverpool on embarking he met a man who had already visited the United States and who gave young Davies an enthusiastic description of America's beauties and grandeurs. So impressed was the young man that the same evening he at once went to the steerage cabin and wrote a full description of the country, telling of his arrival in America and of the difference between the New and the Old World. This letter he gave to the steward at Queenstown to be posted to his relatives.

"Several years elapsed," says Mr. Davies, "before it occurred to me how foolish and thoughtless I had been. The postmark itself would prove I had not landed in America, and they would receive the letter several days before it would be due from those distant shores. I can certainly not boast a large amount of common sense."

A similar diverting innocence is to be remarked throughout the life conduct of Mr. Davies. When, for example, he set himself after his return to England to writing verse and trying to publish it, his behavior was so naïve as to be almost pathetic. The matter is too lengthy to go into now, but in giving an account of his publishing adventures Mr. Davies reveals quite unconsciously a character which is wonderfully likable and engaging.

In his "delicate and individual handwriting, the sort of handwriting one might expect from Shelley or George Meredith," (to quote Bernard Shaw's words) Mr. Davies has just written to tell me that his book is as yet unpublished in the United States. This is to be regretted, if only for the reason that a good half of the volume deals with America, and—on the principle that people like to read what they know already—should therefore prove interesting to Americans.

One of Mr. Shaw's introductory statements ought to arouse, by the way, the commiseration of all humane readers. He states that he receives a gift of a volume of minor poetry "once a week or so." This is almost as bad as the case of George Meredith, who, according to the perhaps somewhat exaggerated statement made to me lately by one of his friends, receives from their authors presentation copies of half the books published in England.

The other tramp book which is arousing interest is called, as I have said, "Letters from Queer Street," and as a story suffers very much from the fact which its title indicates—that is, from its being written in letter form. There seems—as is usually the case when a story is told in the form of letters—no particular reason why this method should be used rather than the straightforward first person. Nothing is gained by making the unfortunate John Mason tell his history by means of impossibly long and impossibly frequent letters to a friend in Australia. Much is lost, on the other hand, by breaking in upon the narrative with such phrases as: "But I will tell you more about what happened in my next letter."

Still, Mr. Abbott's story is a striking one. He has written a description of a hanging which should prove discouraging reading to those who contemplate murder, and, in giving an account of how his hero was led away from the suicide he contemplated, has conceived a wonderfully telling piece of grim humor.

The most important book published here this week has without any doubt been the life of Herbert Spencer. Another important book is—in two ways—very much in the air. It is the work on China which everybody seems to feel the distinguished Sir Robert Hart ought to write, now that he is returning from his labors there. As soon as Sir Robert reaches England he will find himself confronted by the blandishments of almost every publisher in London, or such, at any rate, is the current rumor.

Miss M. P. Willcocks, whose novel of last year, "The Wingless Victory," met with a reception tremendously, and, in the minds of some of its readers, unnecessarily, enthusiastic, is about to publish another book. This new story will be called "A Man of Genius," an attractive title, for the genius, though he is said to make an unsatisfactory family man, forms certainly one of the most attractive possible personages for a novel's hero.

Dr. Robertson Nicoll tells this week a little story about a famous authoress whose name he does not divulge. It appears that the lady is much troubled by strangers who persist in writing letters to her. One of these unknown correspondents—a woman—wrote the authoress to say that she had named her last baby after her, and requesting the authoress's views on her choice. At last the authoress saw a chance to avenge herself for the many hours she had wasted reading and replying to uncalled for correspondence.

The authoress sent back a thick envelope inscribed "Not to be opened till baby's thirtieth birthday." And now the mother is consumed by curiosity to know what is inside the envelope.

STORIES OF THE STAGE.

THE STAGE DOOR. By Charles Belmont Davis. Illustrated. Pp. 360. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

This is a collection of ten stories which have appeared in several magazines, and which author and publishers agreed were worth reprinting together. The stories are alike in taking their savor from the stage, and generally develop the idea that the people of the theatre are much like other folks, having their failings, to be sure, but developing unsuspected virtues under trial as well. Coccaro the Clown, for example, one of the partners in a vaudeville team, saves a first night which the leading man had imperiled, and returns good for evil in a manner worthy of a Sunday school book. Miss Brunelle, a show girl, turns a trifler—a Johnny, as some would say—into the path of seriousness and honor, redeeming his bills at a lobster palace, and advising him soundly in circumstances which try his temper sadly. "The Flawless Emerald" is a detective tale regarding a King's jewel stolen from an actress, and recovered and stolen again, until the author is so tangled up in his plot that he is able to extricate himself only by the device of a paste duplicate. And there is a sort of female Col. Newcome, a mature actress, who saves a well-born lad from an unfortunate marriage by taking him to see his divinity in her home life, a fit companion picture to Thackeray's portrait of the Costigan home. The tales are slender in texture, but they are entertaining, with much atmosphere of newspaper life as well as dramatic, and both touched with the pen of a familiar.

Novel by a New Author.

"The Woman Pays," a New York story, by a new author, Frederic P. Ladd, will be issued June 6 by Mitchell Kennerley. The chief character is depicted as an up-to-date metropolitan clergyman who achieves popularity by methods sometimes termed sensational. A love story with a tragic ending runs through it.

A second manuscript by the same author has been accepted by Mr. Kennerley, which he will probably offer in the Fall. Mr. Ladd is of the class of '93, Brown, and has long been a writer of short stories. His best-known previous work is "As a Man Sows," a dramatic sketch which has been used by Robert Hilliard for several seasons.

MONTAIGNE AND HIS INFLUENCE

Interesting Parallels Between the Great Frenchman and His Many Famous Contemporaries.

By EDWARD CARY.

"I HAVE found my work extremely interesting. I hope its results may interest others." Thus modestly writes Miss Grace Norton in introducing another volume of the charming series on Montaigne, which now numbers four, with at least one more coming. She adds, in her favorite author's quaint sixteenth century French, a characteristic sentence which may approximately be rendered: "Should no one read me, is it time lost to have occupied myself for so many leisure hours with reflections so useful and agreeable?" And there is more than a formal and superficial analogy between Miss Norton's work and that of the marvelous Frenchman. Like him she has lived much in her library, and knows its inmates with the nice knowledge and penetrating insight which intimate, constant, and long intercourse alone can give. One might infer, indeed, that Montaigne had been to her as exclusively as to him the main object of study, so thoroughly does she seem to understand him, and with such loving minuteness does she trace the wandering threads of his influence in other writers, of his own time and later, French and English.

One can almost imagine a quiet library in Cambridge, as full and well chosen as that of "Old Michel Eyquem," in which the "heures oysives" of the patient and eager lady have been spent for many years in delighted research, comparison, reflection, compilation, and comment. "Compilation" and "editing" are the terms in which she describes the fruit of her labor and her pastime. But it is more than that. Miss Norton, both directly and incidentally, throws helpful light on many points in Montaigne's kaleidoscopic writings, and it is to be hoped that before she finishes with him she may give us a sustained and balanced estimate of the man. Such a work from the pen of a gifted woman, experienced in study and criticism, of ripe judgment and independent mind, might well be a unique contribution to the world's knowledge of the complex, subtle, varied character of Montaigne. It would not be altogether a pleasant task. On no other subject is Montaigne's candor more terrible than on that of the position and function of women; on none are the results of his candor more conflicting. Two quite disparate pictures of woman as he describes her might be elaborated from his text, implying two conflicting portraits of himself—one revolting, gross, contemptuous, and contemptible; the other gracious and fair. It would be unsafe to assume that any writer, woman or man, could reconcile these. It would be interesting to have a capable woman's conception of the relation of the two and of the interaction of the forces they represent.

There is one portion of Miss Norton's volume on "The Spirit of Montaigne" in which she traces "similarities" between his work and that of Shakespeare. It is not a question of the latter's "indebtedness" to the former, but rather of the sympathy between them. Previous writers have confined themselves to comparison of passages in Shakespeare's text with that of Florio's translation. Miss Norton pursues the comparison between the French text of the "Essais" and certain passages in "Romeo and Juliet," "The Two Gentlemen of Verona," "The Merchant of Venice," "King Henry IV.," "The Merry Wives of Windsor," and "King Henry V.," all previous to Florio's translation. She says:

> I leave to others to decide which is the most likely, that Shakespeare should have read the 'Essais' in their original language, and been from the first more or less indebted to them, or that the same ideas should have been spontaneously in his mind as they were in that of Montaigne. Either hypothesis is to my mind highly probable.

Miss Norton's "The Influence of Montaigne," is extremely interesting. It is a grouping of the more significant comments on him of French and English writers, of allusions to him, and of plagiarisms from his writings. Some of the latter are perhaps hardly plagiarisms in the strict sense; they are all, however, amusing and some very instructive.

The translation of M. Gabriel Compayré's little volume on "Montaigne and Education of the Judgment," by J. E. Mar ior, is well done and well worth doing. The original is a brief but intelligent examination of Montaigne's ideas, on education, contained in his formal essay or scattered through his works. Along with the customary contradictions. M. Compayré presents the features of Montaigne's general theory in a striking and informing fashion. In some respects his book is obviously intended for the latitude of Paris, but it has merits that any teacher should find helpful. E. C.

NEW EDITIONS OF MR. CONANT.

THE PRINCIPLES OF BANKING. By Charles A. Conant. Pp. 488. New York and London: Harper & Brothers. $1.75.

A HISTORY OF MODERN BANKS OF ISSUE. With an account of the economic crimes of the nineteenth century. By Charles A. Conant. Pp. 609. New York and London: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.

MR. CONANT'S books were so fully noticed at the time of their first appearance that it is now only necessary briefly to record the new editions. Mr. Conant's books are as well qualified for rereading as for reprinting, and yet they are not of a class of which it can be said frequently that an edition is exhausted in half a year. This is the explanation of the reappearance of these volumes, and it attests the unusual interest felt just now in a topic which appeals rather to the few than the many. Each of the books has something fresh to justify the new edition. The "Modern Banks of Issue" has an exhaustive chapter tracing events from the crisis of 1893 through that of 1907-8. It is the earliest and fullest systematic and philosophic account of those historic incidents. The new edition of the "Principles of Banking" is the second part of the "Principles of Money and Banking," revised and published as a separate volume. The two volumes supplement each other, one being historical narrative and the other developing economic principles. Americans are so fond of boasting of their institutions as being the best in the world that it is—or ought to be—a shock to their self-love to reflect that their banks alone among those of nations of the class of the United States have suspended payments during the present generation and during times of peace and prosperity.

Even more wounding to American pride is the fact that Congress deals with the problem of reform so inadequately. These facts are prevented from being unmitigated disgrace by the fact that our unhappy experiences have been the fruit of a system based upon unsound principles and adapted to defy unblemished administration, and by the other fact, already referred to, that while Congress shows stolid Bourbonism, the country at large is both keenly interested and well informed. It is fortunate, for these topics will be paramount for not a few years to come. These volumes contain the dismal universal record of government interference with monetary laws, and our own most recent experience is the most shocking of all, not alone because of the magnitude of our disaster, but because it was so unnecessary, and so inflicted upon ourselves by sinning against light. The procedure of Congress in dealing with the wreckage is proof that we have not yet learned the lesson that a commercial country should regulate its currency according to commercial conditions and economic principles, and not leave it to be regulated by the intrigues of politicians thinking rather of the campaign and how to deceive the voters into thinking that something is done, than of how to enact the best laws the science of finance can inspire. In assisting this work Mr. Conant has done yeoman's service.

THE NEWEST WINTER PLAYGROUND.

Mediterranean Africa is the subject of the latest book to be penned and pictured by Francis Miltoun and Blanche McManus, already known by their several volumes on France and Italy. "In the Land of Mosques and Minarets," (L. C. Page & Co., $3,) is the title of this present production, and in writing it their trail carried them through the cities and towns and many out-of-the-way places of Tunisia and Algeria, which they describe in a nutshell as the world's newest Winter playground. The text is written entertainingly and gives no end of information, both ordinary and unusual, about the lives, manners, and customs of the natives, the country itself, and the line of contact between the natives and the many-nationed crowd of aliens. Mr. Miltoun writes always with a light and glancing touch, but that fact often serves to impress upon the reader all the more vividly the significance of what he says, as, for instance, when he tells of the huge importations of Singer sewing machines and ten-gallon tins of Standard oil. The illustrations, of which there are nearly a hundred, are from drawings and paintings by Blanche McManus, and are mostly full page, in color or sepia. Several excellent maps aid the reader in keeping his sense of place and direction.

IN THE PLEASANT LAND OF FRANCE

Farming, History, Art, a Nation's Tragedies and Comedies, Happily Sketched in Prothero's Essays.

MR. PROTHERO is that very pleasant and unusual person who can be, at one and the same time, both scientifically accurate and agreeably sentimental.

His book* is a composite of many things. From French poetry to French agriculture he glides easily, though the two, one would say, are not exactly related topics. But Mr. Prothero has seemingly given the one no more conscientious study than the other. He has knowledge and insight to discuss both in a satisfying way.

In the one volume, then, the reader gets thoughtful and sympathetic essays on Rabelais and early French poetry, an excellent paper on the historical and artistic aspects of Fontainebleau, and an exhaustive treatise on French farming. That is covering some ground. However, because Mr. Prothero has an extended range it must not be thought that his book is not worth consideration from the careful reader. On the contrary, it is eminently interesting.

For American readers the essay on Fontainebleau will probably hold the greatest share of interest. As the author very properly remarks no public building in France appeals to the historical imagination more eloquently; none awakens so rich and varied a group of striking associations; none is so thickly haunted with memories of the past; none is tenanted by the ghosts of so brilliant a crowd of famous men and women. It is a document to which twenty Kings of France have set their sign-manuals, a chronicle of much of the history of France, a dumb yet eloquent preacher of the mutability of human greatness.

Now all this Mr. Prothero knows and understands, and instead of the dry dust of literary and historic tradition he gives a narrative account of Fontainebleau, the fifty or more pages of which are bound together by a strong thread of lively human interest. From Louis le Gros to Napoleon III. the pageantry of pomp and passion is unfolded in a succession of picturesque incidents pertaining to the fascinating old pile.

For the thousands of Americans who annually make their holiday in France one could do not better than recommend this essay. Historically and artistically Fontainebleau is the jewel of French palaces. And to know its history is to be in touch with the story of the nation. No one will read Mr. Prothero's essay without feeling a quickened interest in the place itself and in those who successively served as the leading figures in the comedies and tragedies of its history.

For a more restricted class Mr. Prothero's studies on agricultural subjects may hold some interest. Most agricultural writers are heavy. He is not, though the specialist will not accuse him of flippancy in the handling of his theme. He has the understanding for selecting subjects that will make "good reading." An account of the agrarian outrages in the districts of Picardy, known by the sinister title of Saugterre or Sauterre, reveals an extraordinary condition of affairs. The outrages, Mr. Prothero tells us, have been committed in the full sight of day. Curés have been shot in church for the offense of burning their own glebe, and yet it has been impossible to secure evidence to convict the offenders. "As recently as 1868," there were ten cases of incendiarism before the Criminal Courts, which were attributed to the "broit de marché" and "thirteen horses belonging to a 'deponteur' (land-grabber) had their tongues cut out"; while a Mayor who took a farm at an increased rental in defiance of custom "was found drowned in a well."

Evidently Ireland has not been alone in its land agitations. And it is observed that in the Saugterre there are no such things as race hatred or religious prejudice. Land hunger alone has been the incentive to outrage.

Gentler, pleasanter reading is the "Essay on Modern French Poetry," with some musical translations of fine examples.

BOSTON GOSSIP OF LATEST BOOKS

Several New Novels Appearing This Season—Fall Plans of Authors and Publishers.

BOSTON, May 29.—The story of the wife whose husband marries her from a sense of duty, and finds himself reduced to abject slavery by her myriad excellences, perennially delights women, and as "Truth Dexter" had the additional attraction of being published under a pseudonym, it is not very strange that Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. announce its twenty-eighth printing among their Summer publications. This edition, to be called the "Popular," has the new plates, cover design, and frontispiece of the "Illustrated" edition, originally issued as a holiday book.

Miss Lillian Whiting is in Paris, selecting the illustrations and gathering the material for "Paris the Beautiful," which is to be one of the holiday books for 1908.

Messrs. Small, Maynard & Co. announce a new book on advertising by Prof. Walter Dill Scott, who has been making experiments and collecting statistics valuable to advertisers, following the lines of thought suggested in his first book. The firm is also about to publish a new volume by Dr. James H. Hyslop, in which he brings forward new arguments in support of his theory that the apparent frivolity and insignificance of many "communications" purporting to emanate from the spirits of the dead is a proof of their genuineness.

The Clark Publishing Company has in press "The Law of Love," by an anti-Catholic author, who seems to have made an exhaustive study of the works of the late Monk Lewis and M. Eugene Sue, and, therefore, knows more about the Society of Jesus than has been revealed to persons whose knowledge is derived from ordinary sources. The hero, a Basque ball player, emigrates to Canada, and discovers a smuggling Jesuit "brotherhood" controlled by a Father whose private graveyard contains the bodies of thirteen victims of his dagger; also he discovers a Duke, his hitherto unknown father, and goes home to find the parish priest ready and willing to marry him to a recreant nun, unreleased from her vows, amid the applause of his friends, many of whom have virtuously resolved to abandon the habit of confession. The author seems as innocent of humorous intention as any Know Nothing of fifty years ago.

"The Making of a Yachtsman's Wife" and "Priest and Pagan" have gone into second editions. The entire Little Colonel Series is being published in many Southern and Western States as a newspaper serial.

Mr. Philip S. Marden, the author of "Greece and the Aegean Islands," has returned from his journey in Spain, and is busily engaged upon the record of his impressions to be published by Houghton, Mifflin Company.

For the benefit of those who to-day sit about the American substitute for the Ambrosian board, the H. M. Caldwell Company is issuing "Scottish Toasts," bound in brilliant plaid, and "Irish Toasts," bound in cloth thickly powdered with shamrocks. It need hardly be said that the "maytayrials" for the toddy or the punch should correspond to the title.

"Julie's Diary," of which Messrs. John W. Luce & Co. are publishing an authorized translation this week, offers itself as the work of an anonymous writer, presumptively Danish, as the keeper of the diary is a Copenhagen girl, the daughter of a flower painter, and Prof. Magens. The time included in the action is only a year, but it suffices for Miss Julie, virtually betrothed to an honest man, to be fired with ambition to imitate the ladies whom she sees calling upon a good-looking bachelor in the house opposite her father's. Imitate them she does, selecting a young actor as the person to receive her devotion, and when she has given her uniquely brutal version of "Adieu, forever more, my love," the honest man sweetly informs her that she has not sinned but merely loved another, and that he is "happy because he can help her, and knows that as his wife she will never betray him." It is difficult to decide whether his Christianity or his confidence is the more colossal, but it does strike one that with such a sweet disposition as his no future state can have any terrors. He would smile on the good pit coal grudged to "Tomlinson," or the choice brimstone of "Fitz Adam's Story," and he is original, although Julie and the man of her choice are familiar enough.

STEPHENSON BROWNE.

FOR FOLLOWERS OF THE FOX.

The growing interest in this country in the sport of fox hunting—with or without the fox—will afford a welcome for "Nimrod's Condition of Hunters," (John Lane Company, $4.) "Nimrod" was the nom de plume of Charles James Apperley, one of the most famous of British sportsmen and writers upon sport of his day, which was the second quarter of the last century. He wrote from a mind well furnished with a wide variety of knowledge, aside from that of his specialty, and put into his work the information born of years of experience and observation. The veterinary portions of this present publication have been brought up to date by the editor, Frank Townsend Barton. A dozen impressions from the Turner lithographs which illustrated the original volume, with a score of other pictures of famous hunters, add interest to the book.

THE COAST OF CHANCE.

Once in a Pink Moon, (we use the term advisedly, since blue, green, and golden moons are nowadays permissible, even if unusual)—once in a Pink Moon, then, one finds an utterly charming story.

By this we do not mean a noble, scholarly, nor religious book—nor one exalted along any other staid and unsympathetic lines. We mean, rather, a book into which the moonshine and witchery of life has been infused; one which may dare to be charming, without the necessity of being called before a tribunal to say why?

It would be quite impossible for a mere reviewer to capture the "first, fine careless rapture" of this delicious tale of adventure, emotion, and beautifully balanced intrigue. We begin it with a subtle sense of impending complications; the complications arrive with battalions to the front and also hinterwards. There are two attractive and inexplicable heroes, and a heroine that we completely love. Between the three our interest, our sympathy, our adoration become decidedly tangled up, but on we go, jocundly, regretting the turning of every page, because it brings us nearer to the close of this enchanting story.

Perhaps one ingenious person in ten will discover the solution of the mystery before the clever authors deign to offer it casually and generously to them. The writer, for one, confesses to having utterly failed to pierce the adorable opaque mists of the narrative and its evolution. But whether you fall victim to the labyrinthine charm of the plot, or have sense enough to guess the delightfully impossible climax—you are certain to be charmed, thrilled, carried miles out of your hum-drum self, and captivated for all time by delightful, honest, warm-blooded Flora. The fine and womanly choice, which she makes in the dark, as it were, electing to stand by the man whom she erroneously believes to be a criminal, is like a refreshing breeze in a stagnant fictional world swept by the raw or feeble winds of doubt, judgment, righteous censure, overworked conscience, and other uncomfortable and unsympathetic elements.

We wish the world were inhabited, so far as the feminine population went, by Floras. It would be difficult to imagine a sweeter, truer, more human and more healthily constituted creature than this dear, dear heroine of the Misses Chamberlain's book.

As for the story, "The Coast of Chance," (Bobbs, Merrill & Co.,) it is new, vital, well written, and so crisp yet smooth of motion, that it carries the most unwilling reader pell-mell to the finish. And why does it end so soon?

REMINISCENCES OF PUBLIC LIFE.

A man who has been in and out of public life for half a century, who has known most of the prominent men of his time, and who has often been in the secret councils of his party is bound to collect a great store of entertaining reminiscences, and it is just such a pleasant book of memoirs that has been written by Clark E. Carr in "My Day and Generation," (A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago.) Mr. Carr has been for fifty years one of the prominent orators of the Republican Party and has spoken all over the northern half of the country in almost every Presidential campaign since 1856. His reminiscences begin with a trip to California in 1869 in company with Gov. Yates of Illinois and other prominent men of that day and end with an account of how he organized an Indian Corn Kitchen at the Paris Exposition of 1900. There are impressions of a great number of public men, entertaining stories about them, and much reminiscence of King Christian and Queen Louise of Denmark, to whose Court he was United States Minister, their large family and simple and human home life.

A STIRRING SUMMER TALE.

This, "The Simple Case of Susan," by Jacques Futrelle, (D. Appleton & Co., $1.25,) is the kind of book one cannot help associating with a hammock stretched comfortably between two shade trees, and in the hammock a person whose sole aim for the moment is to get the greatest amount of amusement with the least possible exertion. As such it can be recommended. The stirring narrative of Marjorie Stanwood's elopement with Lieut. Faulkner, U. S. A., in a rival lover's automobile, with her own father an unwitting accomplice, will cause the Summer's heat to be forgotten. It was written to sell, and no doubt it will sell, and we have it on no less authority than that of Dr. Samuel Johnson that "No man but a blockhead ever wrote except for money," hence we can congratulate Mr. Futrelle.

AN EXPERT ON THE CUBAN WAR

Ten Years' Campaign Critically Analyzed in Exhaustive Work by Capt. Herbert H. Sargent.

Already favorably known to students of military matters by his books on "Napoleon Bonaparte's First Campaign" and "The Campaign of Marengo," Capt. Herbert H. Sargent of the Second Cavalry has turned his attention to "The Campaign of Santiago de Cuba," (A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago, $2.50,) and in three neat volumes gives a history and discussion of our part in the Cuban war that will be of quite as much interest to the layman as to the military specialist. Beginning with a brief résumé of the ten years' war in Cuba, followed by a more detailed account of the insurrection preceding the blowing up of the Maine, the author enters with that event upon his intimate survey of the campaign. He has paid the greatest attention to the accurate presentation of events, quoting dispatches and orders on both sides whenever it was possible to obtain them. He has omitted, however, to mention that cablegram from Madrid, on the very eve of the declaration of war, in which Spain went down on her knees and offered to grant every demand of the United States. Washington suppressed it at the time, because the whole country was war mad but it was published the next year in the Blue Book, and since then has had newspaper mention two or three times. It can be found in the Government archives, and, though the light it throws upon our part in the Spanish war is shameful enough, no sturdily truth-telling history of that war is complete without it.

Capt. Sargent finds the Spanish operations in Cuba against the insurgents and afterward against the United States Army indolent, in that they were confined to the defensive and neglectful of the primary principles of military strategy. Readers who have obtained all their previous knowledge of the war from the newspapers will perhaps be surprised to find that he mentions the Rough Riders and their gallant Colonel, even in the account of the battle of San Juan Hill, only once, and that in the most incidental way. The final chapter is taken up with an interesting discussion of the general plan of the campaign on both sides, with comparisons with other famous campaigns in history, its results upon the general conception of the art of war, a consideration of the military policy of the United States and of the relative importance of the army and the navy. It is well worth reading by all citizens who wish to hold intelligent opinions upon a matter of the very greatest moment in the National life. It is matter for regret, however, that Capt. Sargent, although he does not hesitate to speak frankly of the dreadful blundering and lack of foresight which cost more lives than did the actual fighting, does not even mention the science of sanitation as a factor in military effectiveness. Its tremendous importance was so thoroughly demonstrated during the Russo-Japanese war that military commanders can no more afford to ignore it hereafter than they can afford to send their troops to the front without ammunition.

SEA FIGHTS AND SEA DANGERS.

Considering how brimful of possible mystery, adventure, and danger actual war and actual exploration at sea may be, it seems something like painting the lily to adorn these with high-pressure flights of the imagination. The result, in "The Battle for the Pacific," (Harper & Brothers, $1.25,) is thrilling enough to satisfy any appetite for the spice of excitement. The book is a collection of short stories by half a score of well-known writers of entertaining sea yarns—Kirk Munroe, F. H. Spearman, Yates Stirling, Jr., Rowan Stevens, and others. Most of them are descriptive of imaginary battles at sea, in some undetermined future time, when human ingenuity shall have added many new terrors to death-dealing instruments. Others detail hair-raising and marrow-thrilling adventures and experiments, and all depend upon marvelous human courage and endurance to bring their fantasies to successful issue.

"THE POSTSCRIPT."

The talent and care which have evidently been expended on this novelette, "The Postscript," by Eleanor Stuart, (The McClure Company,) are indications that when the author writes a simple, straightforward story, with no attempt at soul-probing, the result will be something of first importance. The Italian setting is not the only basis of similarity to other recent problem stories—it is further shown in the rather pathological display of introspection—but the plot is a variation of a well-worn theme. Certain examples of rhetoric, as, for instance, "the couch slipped over the floor with an operatic shriek"; and a ten-year-old boy who sagely remarks, "Everything is good, God first of all; it is so stated in the orphanages," will not pass uncriticised.

THE JUNE MAGAZINES.

A Return to the Old Style Architectural Cover Noticeable in the Case of Three of the Forthcoming Monthlies—Interesting Art Contributions and New Fiction by Some Well-known Writers.

WITH a pretty consideration for its old friends Harper's Magazine celebrates its fifty-eighth anniversary by turning out the June number in that famous old buff cover with the boy blowing soap bubbles and the other boys strewing flowers from their twin pedestals. Simultaneously McClure's appears without the usual bright-colored pictures on the outside. The new cover, which is to be permanent, shows a complex design of scrollwork and foliage within a Greek border. The larger, freer, and simpler design of The Century cover will probably please more people.

To pass to the minor matter of contents, the June Harper contains a curious article on the "Pressure of Sight," in which Waldemar Kaempfert (after Arrhenius) explains why a comet's tail does not trail in the course of the portent, but streams out in the opposite direction from the sun. When the particles are small enough, it appears the pressure of light upon the surface overcomes the force of gravity upon the mass. In fiction, besides Mrs. Ward's serial, there is a story by Alice Brown and another little piece by Muriel Campbell Dyas, whose extraordinary "Mother Bird" was lately published by the same magazine.

A charming drawing by Alma-Tadema of Miss Terry as Imogen is reproduced in McClure's, while color prints of the two portraits by Gilbert Stuart recently presented to the Metropolitan Museum of Art furnish two very brilliant pages.

In The Atlantic not the least readable contribution is an essay by Miss Agnes Repplier on "Our Great-Grandmothers' Novel." Maybe Miss Repplier is a bit intolerant of the "delicacy of a refined female"—but one must admit the temptation. Orlando F. Lewis discusses "The American Tramp." Robert Hichens and Jules Guérin between them try to interpret in The Century "The Spell of Egypt." One suspects both of them rather of splashing their own colors upon the ancient Nile country than of taking the colors nature provides. But it is all very "scenic." More important, perhaps, is what Gerald H. Thayer has to say about bright colors and iridescence in animals as aids to concealment.

In Putnam's Henry Holt writes very characteristically about the Southwest country toward the Pacific, and Arthur C. Benson discourses "at large" upon the love of God.

Some drawings of New England fisher folk in Scribner's are framed about with text, for which the artist, Sidney M. Chase, is responsible. The text doesn't appear to have any other reason for existence. The pictures are admirable. Scribner's contains, among other things, a short story about an artist by Mrs. Wharton. Mr. W. J. Locke's delightful "Simple Septimus" makes the American Magazine worth while to the fellow that reads for pleasure. Ray Stannard Baker offers instruction to the purposeful in an article on "The Negro in Politics."

HARPERS BOOKS

The Barrier

By Rex Beach

The one novel that every one is reading or will read this summer—in six cities it has been reported as the best selling novel for the past month. London also has ordered a fresh supply and the Morning Leader says: "The events crowd one another in an absorbing manner. America produces fiction like this supremely well; here is a finished sample."

R. J.'s Mother and Some Other People

By Margaret Deland

In this new volume Mrs. Deland has embodied the heart of her tender, truthful genius. The reader will find himself face to face with the big things of life that find their way into common experience. The pictures are notably good.

King Spruce

By Holman Day

Mr. Gifford Pinchot, the head forester of the U. S. Government, has read this new novel and says: "It is likely to be read by all our men before the summer is out; one of the best pictures of the woods I have ever found." It is the story of a young man's fight for love 'way up in Maine.

The Golden Rose

By Amelie Rives

The theme of this superb story is delicately emotional. An exquisite woman is dominated by a mystical belief concerning the highest relation of lovers. It is a return to the scene of this author's greatest work, "The Quick or the Dead."

The Servant in the House

By Charles Rann Kennedy

So great, so compelling, so reverent, so akin to all the beautiful things in life, that it is more than a play, more than a novel, more than a mere book.

The Tyranny of the Dark

Hamlin Garland tells in his own wonderful way the strange love story of a "psycic."

A BEWILDERING STORY OF ADVENTURE.

We are used to somewhat involved and confusing plots when we undertake the current fiction of adventure, but there comes a limit to our capacity for following the tangled threads of incident. We are inclined to think that "The Caster of Dawn," by Harold Mortimer Kramer, (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company,) is too intricate—we had almost said incoherent—in its construction to serve as the best mental relaxation. It starts off famously, with all the suppressed excitement, the dangers, the secrets, the mistaken identity, and so on, essential to a modern novel of adventure. Indeed it has plenty of color and action up to the last page. But motives, characters, and incidents soon become inextricably mixed. One finds one's self often obliged to turn back half a dozen pages to seek a clue that will elucidate the situation of which we are reading. The book will certainly not fail to hold the attention, and it has many good qualities, but it is too bewilderingly involved for the brain of the average reader.

QUERIES.

TO secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and, as the number received weekly is very large and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must be prepared to await their turn.

PAUL WICKSON.—Kindly say something of the value of an edition of Johnson's English poets with prefaces biographical and critical, small volumes, well bound in leather. London: Printed by J. Nichols for C. Rathburst, (and other names,) MDCCLXXIX, with portraits. Also, Bell's "British Theatre. London: Printed for and Under the Direction of George Cawthorn. British Library. Strand. 1797," many small volumes.

Dr. Samuel Johnson on May 22, 1777, agreed with his book sellers to write prefaces for an edition of the most eminent British poets. These prefaces were originally prefixed to the 60 volumes, (81 numbers,) comprising the first issue, the price of which was £7 10s. Under the title of "Prefaces Biographical and Critical to the Works of the Most Eminent British Poets," the first four volumes of Dr. Johnson's work appeared in 1779, and six more volumes in 1781. We do not find in Book Prices Current a sale of the 1779 issue, but we do find sales of the 1781 issue, which, however, is given as four, not six, volumes. At one sale in London it fetched £2 10s., and another set in boards, with paper covers, brought £13. In this city a copy sold in 1895 for $5.50 and in 1900 for $4.

A copy of Bell's British Theatre, twenty volumes, 12mo, 1776-78, fetched only $4 at the sale of Actor William J. Le Moyne's library in this city. Another set of thirty-five volumes, 18mo, 1791-97, brought $7.88 at the Terry sale. At the Cox sale in 1899, however, thirty-four volumes, small 8vo, half morocco, gilt tops, sold for $54.40. The work often turns up in the auction rooms.

C. M. PYNCHON.—I have in my possession a bound collection of magazines partly composed of The Gentleman's and London Magazine, and partly of The Hibernian Magazine or Compendium of Entertaining Knowledge. Dates run from 1766 to 1781. Book in good condition, some few pages missing.

The Gentleman's Magazine, started in 1731, by Edward Cave, and honored by having Dr. Samuel Johnson, the famous lexicographer, as one of its early contributors, is an interesting publication, often quoted as an authority, but it does not command high prices at auction. A set of seventy volumes, 1731-94, the numbers not consecutive, and some imperfect, fetched only $7 at one sale. At another sale 109 volumes sold for $25.80. At a third sale 221 volumes, 1731-1868, a set lacking the numbers for 1760 and from January to June, 1820, brought $110.50.

We find recorded two sales of The Hibernia Magazine, published in Dublin. In each case the number of volumes was three and the date 1810-11. At one of the sales the price fetched was $3.30 and at the other $4.50. The numbers issued during the American Revolution have more value on account of the pictures they contain of promient Americans of those times.

E. H. M.—Will you kindly tell me whether Poe or Dryden wrote the poem, "The Town and Country Mouse"? Also who wrote, or in what collection of poems I can find "St. Leon's Toast." As I remember, the last lines were as follows:

"I drink to one, he said,
Whose memory never can depart,
Deep graven on a grateful heart,
My mother!"

"The Hind and the Panther," transversed to the story of the Country Mouse and the City Mouse, was written by Matthew Prior and Charles Montagu, Earl of Halifax. It was published in 1687, and was intended as a retort to the well-known poem by John Dryden, "The Hind and the Panther." It was Prior's first literary essay. Some verses by Montagu, on the death of Charles II., had been published in 1684-85. Shortly after the coronation of William III. the Earl of Dorset is said to have introduced Montagu to the King with the remark that he had brought a Mouse to have the honor of kissing his hand. It is thought, however, that Prior had much to do with the retort to Dryden. Prior was given to writing poems about cats and mice. Thus one poem of his is dedicated "To My Lord Buckhurst, Very Young, Playing with a Cat." Another poem is entitled "Erle Robert's Mice." A third poem is called "The Mice," and a fourth is called "The Widow and Her Cat."

The title of the "St. Leon" poem is "The Knight's Toast," and Walter Scott wrote it. It has ten stanzas. The seventh stanza is as follows:

"St. Leon raised his kindling eye,
And lifts the sparkling cup on high;
'I drink to one,' he said,
'Whose image never may depart,
Deep graven on this grateful heart,
Till memory be dead.'"

The tenth and last stanza reads:

"St. Leon paused, as if he would
Not breathe her name in careless mood
Thus lightly to another;
Then bent his noble head, as though
To give the word the reverence due,
And gently said, 'My mother!'"

The poem is printed in McCaskey's Lincoln Literary Collection, pp. 471-72.

S. M. J. V.—Will you please tell me who wrote the story called "The Man Who Tried to Hurry the East"? I supposed it was Kipling, but fail to find it there.

What our correspondent seeks is probably the "Solo from Libretto of Naulahka," which heads the fifth chapter of "The Naulahka: A Story of West and East," by Rudyard Kipling and Wolcott Balestier.

The "Solo" is as follows:

"Now it is not good for the Christian's health to hustle the Aryan brown,
For the Christian riles and the Aryan smiles, and he weareth the Christian down;
And the end of the fight is a tombstone white with the name of the late deceased,
And the epitaph drear: 'A fool lies here who tried to hustle the East.'"

JAMES B. SHRIGLEY.—

"This ae nighte, this ae nighte,
Every nighte and alle;
Fire and sleete and candle lighte,
And Christe receive thy saule."

Marion Crawford quotes one stanza in one of his romances and Arthur H. Norway at greater length in his "Highways and Byways of Yorkshire." Where can I find all of the "song," and what is its origin?

It is an anonymous English ballad, entitled "A Lyke-Wake Dirge," and has nine stanzas. It contains popular beliefs, common in Asiatic and European races, as to the trials of the dead. The ballad is published in Ward's "English Poets," Macmillan & Co. It is as follows:

"This ae nighte, this ae nighte,
Every nighte and alle,
Fire and sleet and candle lighte,
And Christe receive thy saule.

When thou from hence away are paste,
Every nighte and alle;
To Whinny-Muir thou comest at laste;
And Christe receive thy saule.

If ever thou gavest hosen and shoon,
Every nighte and alle;
Sit thee down and put them on;
And Christie receive thy saule.

If hosen and shoon thou ne'er gavest nane,
Every nighte and alle;
The whinnes shall pricke thee to the bare bane;
And Christe receive thy saule.

From Whinny-Muir when thou mayst passe,
Every nighte and alle;
To Brigg o' Dread thou comest at laste;
And Christe receive thy saule.

From Brigg o'Dread when thou mayst passe,
Every nighte and alle;
To Purgatory fire thou comest at laste;
And Christe receive thy saule.

If ever thou gavest meate or drinke,
Every nighte and alle;
The fire shall never make thee shrinke;
And Christe receive thy saule.

If meate or drinke thou ne'er gav'st nane,
Every nighte and alle;
The fire will burn thee to the bare bane;
And Christe receive thy saule.

This ae nighte, this ae nighte,
Every nighte and alle
Fire and sleet and candle lighte,
And Christe receive thy saule."

We have followed the punctuation and spelling in Ward's Student's Edition, pp. 232-233.

C. W. JAY.—Will you kindly tell me the supposed author of "Geraldine"—a beautiful poem on the order of "Lucille"—and any details you can favor me with, and oblige.

Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey, [1515-1547,] wrote love sonnets whose heroine was Geraldine, or Lady Elizabeth Fitzgerald, of the famous Geraldine family of Ireland. In "The Lay of the Last Minstrel" Walter Scott says:

"That favored strain was Surrey's raptured line;
That fair and lovely form, the Lady Geraldine."

There have been other poems about Geraldine, for the name is poetic, but what our correspondent probably seeks is "Lady Geraldine's Courtship," by Elizabeth Barrett Browning. It is a poem, published in 1844, describing how a noble woman falls in love with a peasant poet and weds him. This poem, it is said, was the origin of Elizabeth Barrett's acquaintance with Robert Browning, her future husband. They were married Sept. 12, 1846.

"Lady Geraldine's Courtship" may be found in Vol. II. of Mrs. Browning's "Poetical Works," published by Dodd, Mead & Co., in 1885. It begins:

"Dear, my friend and fellow-student, I would lean my spirit o'er you!
Down the purple of this chamber tears should scarcely run at will.
I am humbled, who was humble. Friend, I bow my head before you;
You should lead me to my peasant, but their faces are too still."

This is only one of the 103 stanzas in the poem, which ends as follows:

"Softened, quickened to adore her, on his knee he fell before her,
And she whispered low in triumph, 'It shall be as I have sworn.'
Very rich he is in virtues, very noble—noble, certes,
And I shall not blush in knowing that men call him lowly born."

K. F. A.—Please tell me if there is any value attached to an old Latin Bible published in 1609? On the title page are some of the following words: "Biblia Sacra—Vulgata edionis, 1609. Sixti 2 Pont—Max et Clementis 2, III. Auctoritate." At the bottom of page reads: "Moguntia apud Io Albinum, impensis Ioanis. Theobaldi Schonwetteri Jacobi Fischeri, 1609."

We do not find any record of a sale of this edition of the Bible. We presume that it is worth from $5 to $10, if in good condition. The binding may make it much more valuable. A Latin Vulgate Bible of 1502, printed on the famous Aldine Press, has fetched at auction $25; also $7. A Vulgate Bible of 1668 has sold for $3.

ANNOUNCEMENTS OF NEW YORK BOOKS

A Number of Important Art Works Promised for the Summer and Fall Season—New Novels.

THREE books are published this week by G. P. Putnam's Sons. Among these is the second volume of the Cambridge "History of English Literature," the first volume of which was published in the earlier part of the season. The work is edited by A. W. Ward, Litt. D., Master of Peterhouse, and A. R. Waller, M. A., Peterhouse; when completed it will occupy fourteen volumes. The present volume takes the "history" down to the "end of the Middle Ages." The various chapters are written by various well-known literary scholars, among them Prof. Saintsbury, Prof. J. M. Manly, Prof. G. C. Macaulay, and Prof. Gregory Smith. The two other books published are "Wanderings in Ireland," a profusely illustrated book of travel, by Michael Myers Shoemaker, author of "Winged Wheels in France," &c., and an additional volume in the Crown Theological Library, entitled "Anglican Liberalism," by twelve churchmen, exponents of certain phases of thought in the Anglican Church.

This week the McClure Company publishes another of O. Henry's volumes of stories of "The Four Million," entitled "The Voice of the City." These stories deal with New York life. The two former volumes bear the titles "The Four Million" and "The Trimmed Lamp." In the latter part of next month the novel by Mary Stewart Cutting, now running serially in the McClure Magazine under the title "The Wayfarers," will be published in book form. The story depicts American life and has to do with the matrimonial affairs of several middle-aged people as well as the loves and courtship of various members of a younger generation.

Two novels will be published next week by D. Appleton & Co. "Gleam o' Dawn," by Arthur Goodrich, author of "The Balance of Power," &c., is one of these. By those who have read it it is called an American sequel to "Madam Butterfly." The other novel is by Molly Elliot Seawell, and is called "The Last Duchess of Belgrade." It tells the story of a little lady who is married by her guardian to a Duke of the Court of Louis XVI., and who suffers with him the penalty paid by the aristocracy in the French Revolution. The novel has been running serially in Appleton's Magazine, the last installment appearing in the June number.

Six novels are published this week and next week by the John Lane Company. These are "A Man of Genius," an English story by Miss Willcocks, author of "The Wingless Victory," &c.; "Absolution," a story of Germany, by Clara Viebig; "The Child of Chance," a story of France, by Maxime Formont; "Handicapped," a story of American life, by Emery Pottle; "The Great Amulet," a story of the Indian frontier, by Maud Diver, author of "Captain Desmond," &c., and "The Bishop's Scapegoat," a study of life in Australia and the French penal colony in New Caledonia, by T. B. Clegg.

This week the Macmillan Company publishes "The Government of England," a work in two volumes, written on somewhat similar lines to Mr. Bryce's "The American Commonwealth," and published in binding and general appearance uniform with the latter. In his preface the author states that Mr. Bryce has read the proof sheets of the work and has given "council and encouragement" throughout the preparation of the book. Other books published are "The Case Against Socialism," a handbook for speakers and candidates, prepared by the London Municipal Society; "Home Life in Germany," by Mrs. Alfred Sidgwick; Thibaudeau's "Bonaparte and the Consulate," translated and edited by Dr. G. K. Fortescue; "Faith in Man," by Gustave Spiller. A German translation of Robert Hunter's "Poverty," has just been issued under the title "Das Elend der Neuen Welt." The translation is the work of Dr. Albert Sudekum, a member of the Reichstag. The book is also being translated into French.

A new edition of Miss Alice Calhoun Haines's story entitled "The Luck of the Dudley Grahams" has just been issued by Henry Holt & Co. Otto Ernst's "Uberwünden," a story of German school life, is also just published. In the near future a new and thoroughly revised edition of Prof. J. R. Angell's "Textbook of General Psychology" will be published.

A new and revised edition of Dr. D. S. Sager's "The Art of Living in Good Health" will be published during the Summer by the Frederick A. Stokes Company. A considerable amount of new material will be embodied in this edition. Tudor Jenks is at present writing a volume the title of which, it is expected, will be "Chemistry for Young People," and which will probably be published in the Fall, to which time the publication of the same author's "Photography for Young People" has been postponed.

This week the Revells issue a book on homiletics entitled "The Ideal Ministry," by Dr. Herrick Johnson, who has recently retired from his Chair of Homiletics and his leadership of the McCormick Seminary. Two devotional books are also published. They are entitled "The Full Blessing of Pentecost," by Andrew Murray, and "Levels of Living: Essays in Everyday Ideals," by Henry Frederick Cope, Secretary of the Religious Education Society.

Three new publications will be made by Charles Scribner's Sons this month. Two of these will appear next Saturday as follows: "Vera, the Medium," a story dealing with Spiritualism, by Richard Harding Davis, and "The Book of Fish and Fishing," an angler's encyclopedia, telling how, when, and where to catch all kinds of salt and fresh water fish. Later in the month will be issued the first volume of a work by Charles Foster Kent entitled "The Historical Bible." This book, to be completed in six volumes, is in the nature of a popular commentary whose purpose it is to "put in the hands of students the really vital parts of the Bible, arranged in chronological order, and to interpret its essential teachings into the thought and language of to-day." The forthcoming volume has for its subject "The Heroes and Crises of Early Hebrew History."

A new edition of Thomas Hardy's "The Return of the Native" is just issued by Harper Brothers. This is the third reprint of this novel within six months. "Trilby" has also gone to press this week for what the publishers claim is the unknownth time.

Two art books are published this week by E. P. Dutton & Co. as follows: "A Guide to the Paintings in the Churches and Minor Museums of Florence," a critical catalogue, with quotations from Vasari, by Maud Cruttwell. This volume is the second in "The Art Collections of Europe" series, and is profusely illustrated with miniature reproductions of noted pictures and frescoes in the churches of Florence. The other book just published is the first volume in a projected "History of Art," to be completed by next May in four volumes. The volume now published has for its title "Ancient Art," and contains 500 illustrations. Other titles, given in the order in which they will appear, are: "Middle Ages Down to the Golden Age," "The Golden Age," and "Modern Times Down to 1907." The original work is by Dr. Giulio Carotti of the Royal Academy of Fine Arts in Milan and the Royal University of Rome. The English edition has been revised by Mrs. S. Arthur Strong, LL. D.

Among other publications next month Brentano's will issue a new volume in their "Wisdom Series," entitled "The Wisdom of Whitman." Volumes in this series already published are "The Wisdom of Franklin," "Stevenson," "Oscar Wilde." Two volumes that will follow the forthcoming "Whitman" are "The Wisdom of Emerson" and "Lincoln." An entirely rewritten and considerably enlarged edition of Granger's "Skat and How to Play It" will also appear during the month. Another book is George W. Crichfield's "American Supremacy," two volumes, in which is given an analysis of the history and present-day conditions of the Latin-American republics.

The following novels are being prepared for publication by G. W. Dillingham Company: "The Warrens of Virginia," novelized from the play by George Cary Eggleston; "Strongheart," from the play by Frederick R. Burton; "Wyoming," by William MacLeod Raine, and "Raw Gold," by Bertrand W. Sinclair.

This week the Broadway Publishing Company issues "The People and Their Property and the People and the Trusts," by Edwin B. Jennings, and "Trixey, the Manicure Girl," by Margaret Redic. Next week "Roosevelt and the Republic," by J. W. Bennett, and "Universal Peace," by Victor H. Duras, will be published.

"Russia's Message," by William English Walling, has been postponed by Doubleday, Page & Co. to the 10th of next month.

Among their Fall books the Baker & Taylor Company will publish a new "Life of Lincoln," in two volumes, by Henry W. Whitney. Mr. Whitney was appointed Paymaster by President Lincoln, with whom he traveled for a number of years on the circuit, besides being closely associated with him in his law business. Another Fall book is by J. J. Bell, who writes a novel of English and Scotch society of the present day, having for its title "Thou Fool."

Funk & Wagnalls publish this week a book by Pearce Kintzing, M. D., called "Long Life and How to Attain It." Next week they will bring out a volume by Louis Albert Banks, D. D., of Denver, Col., entitled "Sermons Which Have Won Souls."

Two books which will be issued by the Outing Publishing Company next month are "The Conquest of the Great Northwest," by Agnes C. Laut, author of "Lords of the North," &c., in which is given what may be called the story of the Hudson Bay Company, and "My Life," an autobiographical record by Josiah Flynt, author of "Tramping with Tramps," &c.

A FATHER OF BRITISH LANDSCAPE.

THE MAKERS OF BRITISH ART: RICHARD WILSON, R. A. By Beaumont-Fletcher. With twenty plates and a photogravure frontispiece. New York: Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25 net.

THE claim of Richard Wilson to the title of "Father of British Landscape," as opposed to the claim of Gainsborough is here ably argued, and, it would seem, well established. That Turner studied his work and learned from him is perhaps more vitally interesting to the art-loving public of to-day. Wilson in his life was little valued by the general public, and in spite of the juster appreciation given by the long perspective of years, is hardly now to be reckoned a popular painter; judged by the standard of the auction rooms, he keeps very nearly the same relative position among his contemporaries that he occupied during his lifetime. Mr. Fletcher has been diligent in garnering whatever may be found relating to Wilson's life and art. It was a hard life, made doubly so by the temperament to which his unsuccess was largely due. "Poor Wilson!" said Constable; "think of his fate; think of his magnificence!" Yet through all his years he did the thing he supremely desired to do, and he did it in his own way. His success was special rather than general, but it was his own. "In the peculiar quality of his light and air, however, as in his rendering of distances, he cannot be said to be a pupil of anybody, but he appears as his own master always," says his biographer with sound appreciation. During his life, as since his death, his art was most valued by his fellow-artists, and even from his rivals he wrung an unwilling acknowledgment of his ability. Ruskin set the seal of his approval on Wilson as the discoverer or founder of "sincere landscape art." To the student of to-day the artificiality in his painting is at least as apparent as the sincerity, and the though of "ennobling" the face of Nature with a ruined temple or two and a few incidental gods and goddesses does not make its appeal as the hallmark of sincerity. At the time he abandoned portrait for lanscape painting, however, his critics had to go far afield for art that equalled his. With the exception of Gainsborongh, England at that time had none so good as he, and his work was oftenest compared with that of Claude, the Poussins, and Rosa. To those interested either in his work or in the larger question of the development of landscape art the book can be recommended. Whether agreeing with the author's estimate of the artist's importance or not, the facts presented and the opinions of other writers freely drawn upon give value and interest to the biography.
